Acquiescence in use of fire escape

The mere fact that authority of landlord's servant was limited to operation and maintenance of building, the master against injuries by his servants acting within the scope of their employment.⁷⁸ On the other hand, it has been held that the employer is not liable for an injury, caused by his employee's conduct, or otherwise, to one accepting or soliciting from the employee an invitation, not known to, or binding on, the employer, to enter or remain on the employer's premises,⁷⁹ although the conduct which immediately causes the harm is within the scope of the servant's employment.⁸⁰ It has also been held, however, that, if the conduct which immediately causes the harm is within the scope of the servant's employment, the master may be held liable therefor, even though the invitation was outside the servant's scope of employment.⁸¹

Licensees. It has been held that a master is not liable for an injury to a licensee caused by the mere negligence of his servant,⁸² but is liable only for an injury willfully or wantonly inflicted by the servant

while acting within the scope of his employment.⁸³ Trespassers It has been stated that the rights of a trespasser are limited when his presence in a place which proves to be one of danger is the result of an invitation extended by a servant contrary to the master's instructions and the injury results from the acts of the servant.⁸⁴ It has been held, however, that a trespasser may recover against the master whose servant, knowing of the trespasser's peril, negligently injures him.⁸⁵

Injuries to children invited on premises. Except where the servant is an alter ego of the master,⁸⁶ or has been placed in exclusive management or control of the master's premises,⁸⁷ he has no implied authority to invite or permit children to be on the master's premises, and the master is not liable for injuries which they may sustain through conditions on the premises or the servant's negligence.⁸⁸

Riding elevator

Elevator operator, permitting outside children to ride merely for sake of riding, was as matter of law, not acting within the scope of his em-

been held to be liable for injury to a customer resulting from an unsafe condition in such store caused by the negligence of his employees.⁸⁹ It is within the apparent authority of a clerk to invite a customer into that part of the store where the material the customer desires to purchase is kept,⁹⁰ or to use a lavatory or toilet in the store.⁹¹ On the other hand, a merchant is not an insurer of his customers' personal safety so as to be liable for the torts of his servants done outside the scope of their employment.⁹²

d. Negligent or Willful Use of Master's Horses or Vehicles

- (1) In general
- (2) What acts are within scope of employment
- (3) Injuries sustained by persons invited to ride
- (4) Consent of master to use his vehicle or team for necessary errands of servant

(1) In General

A master is liable for injuries negligently or willfully inflicted on a third person by a servant in the driving or handling of his horses, teams, or vehicles, if, and only if, at the time of the injury the servant was acting within the scope of his employment.

A master is not liable for injuries negligently or willfully inflicted on a third person by a servant in the driving or handling of his horses, teams, or vehicles, when at the time of the injury the servant was not acting within the scope of his employment, but for some purpose of his own.⁹³ On the other hand, the master will be liable if at the time of an injury negligently inflicted the servant was acting within the scope of his employment,⁹⁴ and provided the person injured is not guilty of contributory negligence.⁹⁵

Willful or wanton acts within scope of authority
The master will be liable for injuries to third persons willfully and wantonly inflicted by a servant while using his horse, teams, or vehicles, and acting within the scope of his employment.⁹⁶

Failure to observe law of road; servant's statutory liability. The fact that the servant is made liable by statute for injuries resulting from his negligence in failing to observe the rule of the road in driving does not exempt the master from his common-law liability for the servant's negligence while acting within the scope of his employment.⁹⁷ An action against the master based on such statute will not lie, however, where the statute imposes liability on "every person offending against the provisions thereof," since such a statute imposes liability solely on the party who is guilty of its violation.⁹⁸

(2) What Acts Are within Scope of Employment

A mere deviation by the servant from the direct or usual route in driving his master's horses or vehicle for some purpose of his own as a general rule will not absolve the master from liability for injuries inflicted by the servant, and, in order to exonerate the master, it is essential that the deviation should be for purposes entirely personal to the servant.

It is very generally held that a mere deviation by the servant from the direct or usual route in driving his master's horses or vehicle in order to accomplish some purpose of his own does not constitute such a turning aside from the master's business as to absolve the master from liability for negligent injuries inflicted by the servant,⁹⁹ and it is not material that the act occurred at some place to which the servant's duty did not necessarily call him.¹ If the servant in going extra viam is really engaged in the execution of the master's business within the scope of his employment, it is immaterial that he joined with this some private business or purpose of his own.² In order to exonerate the master from liability, it is essential that the deviation or departure should be for purposes entirely personal to the servant.³ Nevertheless, where a servant steps aside from the master's business and goes on a journey or does some act wholly independent of, and foreign to, his employment for a purpose exclusively his own, the master is not liable for his acts during such time.⁴

If the master is liable where the servant has deviated, it has been held that it must be where the deviation occurs on a journey on which the servant had originally started on his master's business, in other words, he must be in the employ of his master at the time of committing the grievance.⁵ This principle has been applied in cases where the servant was directed to put up the vehicle and, instead of doing so, used it for some purpose of his own during which time the injury occurred,⁶ or where he used the vehicle for his own exclusive purpose after the completion of his services for the day.⁷

Resumption of master's business. Notwithstanding the servant's deviation or departure from the usual or direct route for his own purposes, if he has fulfilled that purpose and resumed prosecution of the master's work, the master will be liable for his acts in prosecuting the work.⁸

(3) Injuries Sustained by Persons Invited to Ride

It is generally held that a servant has no implied authority to invite or permit a third person to ride on a horse or vehicle in his charge and, if he does so, and such person sustains injuries through the negligence of the servant, the master will not be liable.

Although there is some authority to the contrary,⁹ it is very generally held that a servant has no implied authority to invite or permit a third person to ride on a horse or vehicle in his charge and, if he does so, and such person sustains injuries through the negligence of the servant, the master will not be liable,¹⁰ and especially is this true where the servant is acting in disobedience of express orders not to invite anyone to ride on the vehicle.¹¹ In these circumstances, the master owes no duty to the person invited, who is a trespasser, except to see that he is not wilfully or wantonly injured¹² Nevertheless, the master will be liable for injuries inflicted on him by the wilful, wanton, or reckless conduct of the servant.¹³ These principles have been applied notwithstanding the person invited to ride was an infant,¹⁴ even though, it has been held, the invitee was an infant of tender years,¹⁵ and for that reason released from any charge of contributory negligence¹⁶ It has been held, however, that, when an employee operates a vehicle in the employer's business in the face of a known peril to a child, and the child is injured as a result of the employee's negligence, the employer cannot deny liability on the ground that the employee was not acting within the scope of his employment when he placed the child in a position of peril.¹⁷

(4) Consent of Master to Use His Vehicle or Team for Necessary Errands of Servant

If within the course of his employment a servant is permitted to use the master's vehicle or team to facilitate the performance of necessary errands of his own, the doctrine of respondeat superior applies.

If within the course of his employment a servant is permitted to use the master's vehicle or team to facilitate the performance of necessary errands of his own, he is still an employee while so doing, and the doctrine of respondeat superior applies.¹⁸ Where, however, a servant uses the master's vehicle for the purpose of going to, and returning from, his meals without the master's knowledge or consent, and the contract of employment does not authorize such use, the master is not liable for injuries sustained through the servant's negligent acts in the use of the vehicle.¹⁹

e. Obstruction of Highways and Streams

A master is liable for injuries caused by the negligent acts of his servants acting within the scope of their employment in placing obstructions in highways and streams.

A master is liable for injuries caused by the negligent acts of his servants acting within the scope of their employment in placing obstructions in highways and streams,²⁰ and, on the other hand, where the act of the servant is not within the scope of his employment, no liability attaches to the master for injuries resulting therefrom.²¹

f. Trespass

- (2) Trespass vi et armis

(1) In General

The master is liable for a trespass of his servant if, and only if, it was committed while the servant was acting within the scope of his employment.

The duties of a servant may be such that the commission of a trespass on the land of another may be within the scope of his employment, rendering the master liable for his acts,²² even though the servant disobeyed the master's orders,²³ and this principle has been applied in case of a search for property by the servant on another's premises,²⁴ or a wrongful cutting of timber by the servant on the land of another person,²⁵ especially where the master neglected to superintend the work or instruct the servant so that he could distinguish the boundaries of the master's land.²⁶ On the other hand, the master is not liable for a trespass of his servant done outside the scope of his authority,²⁷ unless he directed the act²⁸ or ratified it.²⁹ Likewise, the master is not liable for a trespass committed by the servant while acting under the orders of a third person.³⁰

Statutory penalty for cutting trees It has been held that an employer is not liable for a statutory penalty for the trespass of his servants in cutting trees of another, committed without his knowledge or consent,³¹ and that, when an employer gives definite instructions to his servants engaged in cutting trees to go only to a well-marked and clearly defined line, such as a fence or a stream, one so distinct and obtrusive that it could not reasonably be anticipated that they would go beyond it, their unauthorized act of cutting trees beyond such line on the property of another will not render the employer liable for the statutory penalty.³²

ferently, a master who authorizes his servant to perform acts which involve the use of force against persons, or which are of such nature that they are not uncommonly accompanied by the use of force, is subject to liability for an assault and battery to such persons caused by the servant's unprivileged use of force exerted for the purpose of accomplishing a result within the scope of the employment.⁸⁴ The question whether or not an employment involves, or is likely to lead to, the use of force against the person of another is a question to be decided on the facts of the individual case.⁸⁵

ployment, the motive or intent with which the act was committed is immaterial.⁸⁶ In order to render the master liable, the authority need not be express but may be implied from the nature of the employment,⁸⁷ and it is not necessary that the assault should have been made for the purpose of performing a task specifically assigned.⁸⁸ It does not matter whether the act of the servant is due to a lack of judgment, infirmity of temper, or the influence of passion, or that the servant goes beyond his strict line of duty and authority in inflicting such injury,³⁹ or even that he acted wantonly or willfully,⁴⁰ and contrary to his master's interests⁴¹ or instruc-

Assault arising out of business com-petition

NH—Morin v People's Wet Wash Laundry Co, 156 A 499, 85 N H. 233.

Assault in rough play

Where store employee kicked child who had been consummating pur-chase, in rough play rather than because of any controversy concern-ing the purchase, master-servant re-

The mere fact that something occurs during the course of a servant's employment, or while he is in the discharge of his duty, which arouses his ire or displeasure, has been held not to afford a ground for holding the master liable for an assault and battery the servant may subsequently commit,⁴⁹ especially where the assault is committed after the employment is completed or the servant has gone off duty.⁵⁰ It has been held, however, that, where a servant begins a quarrel while acting within the scope of his employment, and immediately follows it up with a violent assault, the master is liable, as the law under the circumstances will not undertake to say when in the course of the assault he ceased to act as a servant and acted on his own responsibility.⁵¹

Acting under orders of officer. If the servant at the time of committing the assault is acting under the orders of an officer of the law serving a writ of replevin for the master, he is not liable since the act is the act of the officer.⁵²

Self-defense justifying an assault by the servant will justify the master.⁵³

(b) Assaults by Watchmen, Detectives, and Similar Servants

If a watchman, detective, or other servant to whom is committed the duty of guarding the master's property or maintaining order on his premises uses force unnecessarily, the master will be liable therefor.

A familiar instance in which the employment necessarily involves the right of the servant to use force is in the case of watchmen, doormen, detectives, and others to whom is committed the duty of guarding the master's property or keeping order on his premises, and, if he uses force unnecessarily, or uses a greater degree of force than the occasion warrants, the master will be liable therefor.⁵⁴ On the other hand, the master will not be liable if the assault is made not for the purpose of guarding the master's property or preserving order,⁵⁵ or if the servant was actuated by personal ill will, jealousy, lotion did not exist as respects such conduct, and employer was not liable for resulting injuries—Lane v Safeway Stores, 91 P 2d 160, 88 Cal App 2d 169.

Assault on spectator by baseball player during game for fancied insult was not committed within scope of employment as respects master's liability—Atlanta Baseball Co v Lawrence, 144 S.E. 351, 88 Ga App 497.

Dispute between drivers

A driver who entered into a dispute with a motorist has been held not acting within the scope of his employment in striking the motorist during the dispute where he stopped the vehicle he was driving and left it to pursue the motorist.

(c) Assaults for Purpose of Retaking Master's property.

Servants whose duty it is to retake from third persons property claimed by the master have implied authority to use force in the performance of their duty, and an assault and battery committed in the discharge of such duty is within the scope of their employment.

Servants whose duty it is to retake from third persons property claimed by the master have implied authority to use force in the performance of their duty, and an assault and battery committed in the discharge of such duty is within the scope of their employment,⁶⁰ even though the servants may have disobeyed instructions.⁶¹ Where, however, a servant is without authority to retake goods, the master is not liable for an assault committed by such servant in retaking such goods,⁶² and it has been held that the master is not liable for an assault committed by a store clerk outside the store on a person suspected of having stolen goods in the clerk's custody.⁶³

of force was contemplated or usual, or that the employer knew, or had reason to know, that the collector was the type of person who was likely to resort to force.⁶⁸ A fortiori, the master is not liable for an assault made by the servant where the servant is himself accountable to the master for the price of goods delivered without collecting the charge, and the assault is made by the servant after delivery of the goods without collecting the amount due, to enforce payment thereof.⁶⁹ So, if the servant while attempting to collect a debt commits an assault resulting from a personal quarrel, the master is not liable.⁷⁰

(e) Shooting

A master may be held liable for the shooting of a third person by his servant, if, and only if, the shooting can be said to be within the scope of the servant's employment.

The shooting of a third person by a servant, not done within the scope of his employment or in the line of his duty to the master, imposes no liability on the latter,⁷¹ unless the master participated in, authorized, or ratified the shooting,⁷² and this is true, although it was by reason of his employment that the servant acquired the facilities to commit the act.⁷³

The rule is otherwise, however, where the shooting can be said to be within the scope of the servant's employment,⁷⁴ as where the servant has authority to eject trespassers from the master's premises,⁷⁵ or to make arrests,⁷⁶ and the shooting is done while ejecting trespassers or making the arrests; and the employer is not relieved because the servant exceeded his authority in the details of performance, or even violated express instructions, or that in committing the act he lost his temper,⁷⁷ or although the use of any but reasonable and necessary force was expressly prohibited.⁷⁸ However, there is authority to the effect that the mere employment of a watchman to guard property and keep away trespassers does not involve authority to shoot trespassers;⁷⁹ and it has been held that, if the watchman shoots a trespasser after he has left the premises, such act is not within the scope of his authority,⁸⁰ although there is authority to the effect that, where the servant is authorized to carry firearms to protect the master's property from injury and directed to use them when considered necessary, it cannot be said as a matter of law that the servant is not acting within the scope of his employment in shooting a third person not on the premises but near them.⁸¹ If the watchman

shoots at a person who is not on the master's premises and is making no attempt to trespass thereon, the master is not liable.⁸²

Injuries negligently inflicted While it has been held that, where the master intrusts an unsafe firearm to a servant and a third person is injured thereby as a result of the servant's careless carrying of the firearm, the master is liable irrespective of whether the servant was acting within the scope of his employment at the time the injury occurred,⁸³ it is generally held that the master is not liable for injuries negligently inflicted on a third person by a servant in the handling of firearms while not acting within the scope of his employment.⁸⁴ On the other hand, if the negligent shooting resulting in the injury complained of may be said to be within the scope of the servant's authority, the master will be liable therefor.⁸⁵

Contributory fault of plaintiff. It has been held that a person detected in the commission of a crime, and shot by a servant while attempting to escape arrest, is barred from recovering civil damages against the master by his own contributory fault.⁸⁶

Where the employee himself is not liable, the employer is not liable.⁸⁷

If a servant is hired to guard the master's personal property on the land of another, the servant is not acting within the scope of his employment in shooting a trespasser on such land merely because he refuses to leave the premises, where it does not appear that the trespasser had taken or attempted to take any of the personal property.⁸⁸

§ 576. Personal Liability of Servant

Liability of a servant to third persons generally is discussed infra § 577, and to fellow servants infra § 578

§ 577. — To Third Persons Generally

A servant may be liable for an injury to a third person, notwithstanding the servant was acting in his capacity of servant at the time of the injury and notwithstanding the master may be liable for the tort of the servant under the doctrine of respondeat superior.

The fact that a person is acting in his capacity as servant of another at the time of an injury to a third person does not of itself relieve the servant of liability for such injury,⁸⁹ and the fact that the master may be held liable for the tort of the servant un-

Duty to use due care

Servant does not escape from individual duty to treat with proper care persons with whom servant must come in contact to carry on master's business—Newton v. Southern Grocery Stores, D.C.S.C., 16 F. Supp. 164.

Conversion

Even though a person has acted as the servant of another, such person may, under some circumstances, der the doctrine of respondeat superior does not of itself relieve the servant of liability.⁹⁰ Generally it is not the servant's contract with his master which exposes the servant to, or protects him from, liability to third persons,⁹¹ and liability does not arise from the existence of the relation of master and servant;⁹² the servant's liability arises from his breach of a duty owed to a third person under the law,⁹³ or, as otherwise stated, from the servant's common-law obligation so to use that which he controls as not to injure another.⁹⁴

It has been laid down broadly that a servant is liable for an injury to third persons caused solely by the servant's negligent act in the course of his employment,⁹⁵ where the wrongful act of the servant is the direct and proximate cause of the injury.⁹⁶ In order to constitute a cause of action against a servant in favor of a third person, however, the negligence charged must constitute a breach of duty which the servant owes to such third person.⁹⁷ Generally the servant is rendered liable by such breach of duty,⁹⁸ and it has been held or recognized that, where in the performance of the duties of his employment the servant owes a duty to the public as well as to his master, the servant may be liable to a third person for an injury resulting from a violation, nonperformance, or negligent performance, of such duty.⁹⁹

Where the act of the servant is not a mere omission of duty but is a misfeasance he, as well as the master, will be liable to a third person injured thereby;¹ and, if acting outside of the scope of his employment, he may be liable even though the master is not liable.² In some jurisdictions a distinction is drawn between acts of misfeasance and nonfeasance, and it is held, as a general rule, that the serv-

be liable for conversion of property

In Georgia

(1) The broad statement that a servant is liable for a misfeasance, but not for a nonfeasance, has long been an accepted principle—Atlantic Coast Line R Co v Knight, 171 SE 919, 48 Ga App 53

(2) The principle has been criticized and limited, but the tendency has been nominally to adhere to the letter of the principle, but to say that a nonfeasance in most instances amounts to a misfeasance—Atlantic Coast Line R Co v Knight, supra.

(3) It has been laid down that a servant is personally liable to a third person when his wrongful act in the course of employment is the direct and proximate cause of injury to the third person, whether the wrongful act is one of misfeasance or nonfeasance—Southern Ry Co v Smith, 191 SE 181, 55 Ga App 689—Atlantic Coast Line R Co v Knight, supra.

(4) Failure of an employee digging a ditch to cover it up so as to render it safe for people lawfully in the neighborhood at night is part of ditch construction, and is an act of misfeasance and not nonfeasance—Southern Ry Co v Bottoms, 134 SE 824, 35 Ga App 804

(5) The servant's liability is based on the ground that he is a wrongdoer and responsible for any injury that he may cause—Risby v Sharp-Boylston Co, 7 SE 2d 917, 62 Ga App 101—Atlantic Coast Line R Co v Knight, 171 SE 919, 48 Ga App 53.

(6) Before liability may arise, however, it is essential that there should have been an agreement to perform, or an assumption of performance of, an act with respect to which the alleged liability arose—Risby v Sharp-Boylston Co, 7 SE 2d 917, 62 Ga App 101

(2) The rule has been questioned and criticized but apparently has not been overruled expressly, the court suggested as the most reasonable test of liability "the rule that a servant or agent is liable for acts or omissions causing injury to third persons whenever, under the circumstances, he owes a duty of care in regard to such matters to such third persons. In short, he would be liable whenever he is guilty of such negligence as would create a liability to another person if no relation of master and servant or principal and agent existed between him and someone else"—Lambert v Jones, 98 SW 2d 752, 759, 339 Mo 677

(3) It has been stated that usually a wrongful commission is regarded as misfeasance, while a wrongful omission is a nonfeasance, within the meaning of the rule—Ryan v Standard Oil Co. of Indiana, supra

Conversion

(1) A person acting under the direction of another as servant is not guilty of conversion merely by carrying articles from place to place without any knowledge of wrongdoing, supposing the articles to belong to or to be rightfully in the possession of the person from whom they are received—Smith v Colby, 67 Me 169.

(2) The reception of goods by a servant from one whom he is entitled to regard as the owner and the transportation of such goods to and, where the servant obeys the commands of his master without negligence on his part, generally he is not liable for injuries to third persons unless he knew, or had reason to believe, that the act or acts were hazardous and liable to occasion injury to some third person.⁷ It has been held that a servant who innocently obeys the orders of his master without knowledge that he is acting wrongfully is not liable to the person injured,⁸ but it is otherwise where the servant knows that the act commanded to be done is unlawful.⁹ A servant may be liable to a third person who is injured by the servant's negligent handling of property where the servant owes a duty to such third person in this respect,¹⁰ especially where he has the complete control of property,¹¹ and, according to some cases, one who actually participates in a negligent use of property, with full knowledge of danger to third persons, is negligent, and he cannot avoid liability by showing that he merely assisted the negligent owner as servant or agent.¹² The view has been expressed, however, that a servant owes a duty to protect a third person only when the servant has such control over the property as the master otherwise would have.¹³

An employee who does not participate in the acts of another employee of a common master, on which it is sought to predicate liability to a third person, is not liable for such acts.¹⁴ The selection by an employee of a substitute is not negligence on the part of the employee toward the public if the substitute is competent and there is no failure of due supervision.¹⁵ The view has been taken that a servant is not liable in tort for procuring a breach by the master of the master's contract with a third person.¹⁶

§ 578. — To Fellow Servants

As a general rule a servant may be liable for injuries negligently inflicted by him on a fellow servant in the transaction of the master's business.

While in some earlier cases the rule was announced that a servant is not liable for injuries to a coservant due to his negligence,¹⁷ this doctrine has quite generally been repudiated and the general rule is well settled that a servant may render himself liable for injuries negligently inflicted by him on a fellow servant in the transaction of the master's business.¹⁸ This rule does not rest on any duty imposed by privity of contract, but depends on the common-law obligation of the servant so to conduct himself as not to cause injury to another,¹⁹ and the doctrine that exempts an employer from liability to his servant for injuries inflicted by a fellow servant does not in any way affect the liability of the servant inflicting the injury.²⁰ His liability is not affected by the fact that the master has incurred no liability to the injured servant,²¹ nor is his liability affected by the provisions of the Federal Employers' Liability Act,²² and no right of action by an employee of a common carrier against his fellow servant is created by such act.²³ So also certain state employers' liability acts do not create a cause of action against an employee.²⁴

In some cases it has been either held or intimated that the servant is liable only in case of misfeasance,²⁵ but in others the distinction has been repudiated and the servant held liable for nonfeasance as well as for misfeasance.²⁶ In some cases in which the distinction²⁷ has been considered or has been given effect, particular matters have been regarded as cases of misfeasance²⁸ or as not being cases of misfeasance.²⁹

Servants are not jointly liable for injuries to another servant unless caused by their joint negligence, each is liable only for his own negligence.⁸⁶

§ 579. Joint or Several Liability of Master and Servant

In some, but not in all, jurisdictions a joint action will lie against a master and servant in cases in which the master is liable solely under the doctrine of respondeat superior; usually a joint action will lie where the concurrent negligence of the master and of the servant is the cause of the injury to another servant.

There is a conflict of authority as to whether a master and servant can be sued jointly where the liability of the master is based not on a participation by him in the servant's tort, but solely on the doctrine of respondeat superior.⁸⁷ In some jurisdictions, where the master's liability for the negligent or wrongful act of the servant is based solely on the doctrine of respondeat superior, and not by reason of any personal share in the negligent or wrongful act, by his presence or express directions, a joint action cannot be brought against them,⁸⁸ the liability of the master and of the servant in such case is regarded as several,⁸⁹ and not as joint and they may be liable jointly⁴⁵ or jointly and severally,⁴⁶ and the master and servant are jointly and severally liable in damages where they jointly breach some duty which they owe to a third person and damages result from such breach⁴⁷ Where the act complained of is done by command of the master, the master and servant may be jointly liable,⁴⁸ especially where the master personally assists in committing the act⁴⁹ This principle has been applied where the master directs the servant to convert the property of another⁵⁰ Where a master employs a servant to do an act which involves the use of force against the person or property of another, and the servant, in the course of his employment, uses force in a manner or to an extent unlawful and unjustifiable, both are answerable as trespassers and may be sued jointly⁵¹

Liability for injury to servant. While the view has been taken that a joint action against a master and a servant will not lie where the master is liable solely under the doctrine of respondeat superior,⁵² it has been held or recognized that a joint action will lie against a master and a servant where the tort of such servant causes an injury to another servant for which the master is also liable,⁵³ provided, according to the rule in some jurisdictions, the injury was caused by the misfeasance of the servants so joined, as distinguished from mere non-feasance⁵⁴

Also a joint action will lie where the master and servant each violates a duty owing to another servant with a resultant injury to such other,⁵⁵ where the negligence of the master concurs with that of the fellow servant so that the negligence of each proximately contributes to the injury,⁵⁶ or where a vice principal violates a duty owed to another servant by the master and such vice principal,⁵⁷ and in these circumstances the law will not undertake to apportion the negligence⁵⁸ The rule permitting a joint action against a master and a servant may apply even though the master's liability is statutory while that of the servant is imposed by common law,⁵⁹ although, according to some cases, a joint action against a master and servant will not lie under the Federal Employers' Liability Act⁶⁰

Where, in an action by a servant against the master and another servant, liability of the master is dependent on the negligence of such other servant, the master may not be held liable if such other servant was not negligent⁶¹

son to believe, from the acts and conduct of the owner, that the one employing him was simply the servant of the owner will not estop the owner to deny such relation of master and servant and to rely on the rule applicable to independent contractors.⁶³ Likewise, the fact that the employer's name and insignia are on an automobile does not estop it to claim, in an action for personal injuries to a third person, that the driver was an independent contractor and not a servant.⁶⁴

§ 581. Test of Relationship

The tests for determining whether there is a master-servant or a contractee-independent contractor relationship are generally the same whether the question arises with respect to liability for injuries or with respect to other issues and the matter is therefore treated generally supra §§ 3 (2)-3 (8)

A subcontractor may be an independent contractor as to his contractor.

A subcontractor under an original contractor may be an independent contractor as to such original contractor,⁶⁵ and in determining whether a subcontractor is an independent contractor, in so far as his relation to the principal contractor is concerned, the rules that have already been considered supra

§§ 3 (2)-3 (8) as between the original employer and employee apply.⁶⁶ Where a subcontractor is an independent contractor, the relation of master and servant does not exist between the contractor and the subcontractor or between the contractor and the subcontractor's servants.⁶⁷

§ 583. Dual Capacity of Servant and Contractor

One may be an independent contractor as to certain parts of the work and a servant as to other parts

A person employed to do certain work may be an independent contractor or subcontractor as to certain parts of the work and merely a servant of the one employing him as to the residue of the work.⁶⁸

§ 584. General Rule as to Nonliability of Contractee for Acts or Omissions of Contractor or His Servants

The general rule is that a contractee is not liable for the torts or negligence of his contractor or his contractor's servants.

The doctrine of respondeat superior does not apply where the relationship of the parties is that of contractee and independent contractor,⁶⁹ and, although the rule is subject to numerous qualifications and exceptions, which are discussed infra §§ 585-598, the general rule is that a contractee is not liable for the torts or negligence of his contractor or of servants.⁷¹ Similarly, as discussed infra § 609, a contractor is not liable for the torts or negligence of his subcontractors or their servants.

This doctrine has been expressly reaffirmed by statutory provisions in some jurisdictions⁷² and is not affected by a statute providing that a company shall be liable for all damages occasioned by its negligence,⁷³ or by the negligence of its agents or servants,⁷⁴ or by a statute relating to recovery on contractor's bonds,⁷⁵ or by an ordinance fixing liability on owners, contractors, and builders, etc., "having control or supervision" of the construction of the building, for injuries inflicted during the course of such construction,⁷⁶ or by a statute making it the duty of owners, contractors, and subcontractors engaged in the construction of any building to see that all appliances are carefully tested for the safety of their employees, as such statute applies only to the particular person having charge of the work.⁷⁷

The doctrine of nonliability for the acts or omissions of an independent contractor or his servants is founded on the principle that one person should not be compelled to answer for the fault or neglect of another over whom he has no control,⁷⁸ and that the employer has a right to rely on the presumption that the contractor will discharge his legal duties owing to his employees and third persons.⁷⁹

The general rule that the contractee is not liable for the torts or negligence of his contractor applies where the work is performed on premises owned or occupied by the contractee,⁸⁰ or where the contractee is a railway company.⁸¹ The rule has been applied inter alia to contracts for the erection of build-

§ 585. Circumstances under Which Contractee Liable

The well-recognized exceptions to the rule exempting a contractee from liability to a third person for injury or damage resulting from the wrongful or negligent manner in which work is done by an independent contractor or his servants are discussed infra §§ 586-598

§ 586. — Negligence of Contractee

A person is liable for injuries to third persons resulting from his own negligence, even in connection with work being done for him by an independent contractor and although the contractor is also negligent.

Notwithstanding work is being done by an independent contractor, the contractee will be liable for injuries resulting from his own negligence to third persons,¹⁰ or to the independent contractor himself, as discussed infra § 607, or to the servants of the latter, infra § 601. So, where a part of the work is done by employees of the contractee, the failure to guard the work done by such employees renders the contractee liable, although other work in connection therewith was performed by an independent

Concurrent negligence. The rule, discussed supra § 584, exempting the contractee from liability for injuries resulting from the negligence of an independent contractor or his servants cannot be so extended as to relieve the contractee from liability for injuries caused by his own negligence, even though the contractor may also be negligent.¹²

§ 587. — Injury Necessarily Resulting from Work

The employer is liable for the act of his independent contractor which causes an injury where the act is one which the contractor was employed to do and the injury results, not from the manner of doing the work, but from the doing of it at all

Where the act which causes the injury is one which the contractor was employed to do and the injury results, not from the manner of doing the work, but from the doing of it at all, the employer is liable for the acts of his independent contractor¹³. This is true where the work involves the commission of a trespass¹⁴ or where the work contracted for, as distinguished from the method of doing it, itself creates a nuisance¹⁵. On the other hand, the contractee is not liable under this exception where the

§ 588. — Injuries Caused by Unlawful Work

The contractee will be liable for injuries resulting from the performance of unlawful acts contracted to be done.

If the acts contracted to be done are in themselves unlawful, the contractee will be liable for injuries resulting from the performance of such acts¹⁹ However, this rule is subject to the limitation that the doing of the unlawful act must be the proximate cause of the injury;²⁰ and it is not applicable to an act which is not unlawful²¹

cations of which he did not know and of which by ordinary care he could not have known. In these circumstances, the contractee is entitled to rely on the safety of the plans until the care attributable to the ordinarily careful man likewise circumstanced suggests a suspension of that reliance,²⁵ but, if he is told of defects in the plans made by a competent architect employed by him, it is negligence for him to proceed with the erection of the building called for by the plans,²⁶ and where the contractor is employed only to achieve a result, and the plan is his own, the employer will be liable where the plan is known by him to be hazardous or injurious to third persons.²⁷

Where the injury complained of was not caused by the defective plans furnished, there can be no recovery on that ground.²⁸

Where the work can be done by reasonably careful persons, using such precaution as the law enjoins in the doing of the work, that is to say, if the work contemplated would not, when properly done, necessarily cause injury to third persons, no right of action accrues because of the plans alone.²⁹

§ 590. — Work Dangerous unless Precautions Observed

a. In general

b. What work is inherently dangerous

a. In General

Liability cannot be evaded by employing an independent contractor to do work which is inherently or intrinsically dangerous unless proper precautions are taken.

A very important exception to the general rule, discussed supra § 584, exempting the contractee from liability for injuries caused by the negligence of an independent contractor or his servants is that, where the work is dangerous of itself, or, as often termed, is "inherently" or "intrinsically" dangerous, unless proper precautions are taken, liability cannot be evaded by employing an independent contractor to do it.³⁰ Stated in another way, where, in the

Generally, if danger is inherent in work contracted to be done and might reasonably be expected, employer is liable for contractor's negligence—Wright v Tudor City Twelfth Unit, 12 N E 2d 307, 276 N Y 803, 115 A L R 963—Boylhart v. Di Marco & Reimann, 200 N E 793, 270 N Y 217

Imputation of contractor's negligence to employer

(1) If work done by an independent contractor has in it an inherent element of danger, and through negligence of the contractor proper provision has not been taken to guard against such danger, such negligence is imputed to the employer—American Pacific Whaling Co v. Kristensen, C C A Wash., 98 F 2d 17.

(2) Where there is such an imputation of negligence, it is immaterial that the contractee was not actively negligent—Randle v Naugle, Tex. Civ App, 299 S W 297

Owner of building abutting on highway is jointly liable with independent contractors for their negligence, where work is inherently dangerous to traveling public—Finkelstein v Majestic Realty Corporation, 224 N W. 743, 198 Wis. 537.

Matters not affecting exception

(1) The application of the exception is not restricted to work which may involve serious bodily harm or natural course of things, injuries to third persons must be expected to arise unless means are adopted by which such consequences may be prevented, the contractee is bound to see to the doing of that which is necessary to prevent the mischief³¹ and cannot relieve himself of his responsibility by employing some one else, whether it is the contractor employed to do the work from which the danger arises³² or some independent person,³³ to do what is necessary to prevent the act he has ordered to be done from becoming wrongful. The taking of these precautions, it is said, is a nondelegable duty owing to third persons who may sustain injuries from the work,³⁴ and the contractor is considered an agent or servant for whose act his employer is responsible³⁵

While this exception is applicable where the work will necessarily be dangerous³⁶ or result in injury³⁷ unless adequate precautions are taken, it is not essential that injury be a necessary result of the work,³⁸ it is sufficient that injurious consequences to others will probably³⁹ or likely⁴⁰ attend the doing of the work, or, in the natural course of events, may reasonably be anticipated,⁴¹ unless proper preventive measures are taken. However, the work must be such as will probably, and not which merely may, cause injury if proper precautions are not taken.⁴² If the work is of such a nature that it can be done without probable injury to anyone except in the event of negligence in the manner of doing it, no liability attaches to the employer⁴³

This exception is based on the unusual danger to third persons which inheres in the mere performance of the work itself aside from any negligence on the part of the contractor or his servants,⁴⁴ and the reason for the imposition of liability is the duty of due consideration which one in a civilized community owes to his fellows and to the public, which duty precludes the ordering of that which if done will be inherently dangerous.⁴⁵

A substantial difference between the general rule considered supra § 584 and the exception now under consideration is that in the one case the work is of such character, that, if properly done, no injurious consequences can arise, and in the other the work is of a character from which damages are likely to arise unless precautionary measures are adopted⁴⁶

Premises dangerous to invitees Where the owner, lessee, or possessor of premises under his control employs an independent contractor to do work upon them, which from its nature is likely to render the premises dangerous to persons who may come upon them by the invitation of the owner, lessee, or possessor, such owner, lessee, or possessor is not relieved by reason of the contract from the obligation of seeing that due care is used to protect such persons⁴⁷

b. What Work Is Inherently Dangerous

- (1) In general
- (2) Obstructions, excavations, or openings in public thoroughfare

(1) In General

Generally work is inherently dangerous, within the meaning of the exception, where there is a recognizable and substantial danger inherent in it

The exception does not apply where the work in question or the instrumentality for doing it is not inherently dangerous and, therefore, the facts do not bring the case within the exception⁴⁸ Where danger is not naturally expected to result in the use of a substance or instrumentality, it cannot be said to be inherently dangerous and the owner

painter employed by tenant could not recover from landlord for negligence of servants of independent contractor engaged by landlord to repair heating equipment, in leaving an unguarded opening through which painter fell, since such negligence arose casually out of the mere performance of the work and was not directly connected with landlord's obligation to have the work done—Weinfeld v Kaplan, 26 N.E.2d 287, 282 N.Y. 348, reargument denied 27 N.E.2d 209, 283 N.Y. 304

is not liable for injuries caused by the negligent use thereof by an independent contractor.⁴⁹ However, whether work of a given character is to be regarded as "necessarily," or "inherently," or "intrinsically" dangerous, or its performance "attended with danger to others," within the meaning of such terms when used in this connection, is often a matter as to which different opinions may be entertained,⁵⁰ and the courts have found no rule of universal application by which they may abstractly draw a line of classification in every case between work which is inherently dangerous and that which is not.⁵¹ The question is dependent on the facts of each case,⁵² and important factors to be understood and considered are the contemplated conditions under which the work is to be done and the known circumstances attending it.⁵³ The proper test, it has been said, is whether danger inheres in the performance of the work,⁵⁴ and it is sufficient if there is a recognizable and substantial danger inherent in the work,⁵⁵ even though a major hazard is not involved.⁵⁶ The test is not whether a man of ordinary prudence would have anticipated that the injury would have ensued from the work,⁵⁷ nor can mere liability to injury from doing the work be the test, since injuries may happen in any undertaking and many are attended with great danger if carelessly managed, although with proper care they are not specially hazardous.⁵⁸

Work held inherently dangerous, within the exception, includes: Building of a brick wall abutting on a highway,⁵⁹ depositing an insecticide, consisting of a poisonous dust or spray, on a field,⁶⁰ erection of awnings as appurtenant to a building on a much frequented street in a populous city;⁶¹ fumigation of an apartment by gas,⁶² installation of doors on an elevator shaft where the elevator was kept running for the benefit of tenants,⁶³ propelling of gas through mains before the mains were thoroughly cemented together,⁶⁴ removing a decayed oil derrick,⁶⁵ and setting off fireworks.⁶⁶

Work held not inherently dangerous, within the exception, includes: Calcimining interior walls of a building,⁶⁷ constructing a reinforced concrete bridge over a city street,⁶⁸ constructing a telephone line,⁶⁹ construction of a culvert under railroad tracks,⁷⁰ cutting down trees in a forest;⁷¹ cutting walls with compressed air drills,⁷² disinfecting cars with a medicated creosote solution,⁷³ erection of a grandstand,⁷⁴ excavation preparatory to erection of a building,⁷⁵ fencing a railroad right of way,⁷⁶ floating logs downstream,⁷⁷ grading and improving a street,⁷⁸ installation of pipes in a building to carry water to the ground,⁷⁹ installation of a ventilator,⁸⁰ laying brick,⁸¹ laying a pipe line;⁸² leveling a ditch with picks and shovels,⁸³ making a cellar in a building waterproof,⁸⁴ piling pipe in a city street,⁸⁵ putting up⁸⁶ or taking down⁸⁷ signs on buildings; raising the roof of a brick building,⁸⁸ raising a party wall,⁸⁹ removal of a boiler from a truck,⁹⁰ removing wallpaper by use of a machine,⁹¹ repairing chimneys,⁹² rolling a wheelbarrow across a sidewalk or street for the purpose of removing discarded building material,⁹³ and steaming out a gasoline tank.⁹⁴

Construction or erection of a building ordinarily is not considered inherently dangerous,⁹⁵ but it is otherwise as to the construction of a building eight stories high, abutting a sidewalk on which there is heavy travel, without a protecting cover over the sidewalk.⁹⁶

Dynamiting may be inherently dangerous, in the absence of proper precaution, so as to render the contractee liable for injuries resulting therefrom,⁹⁷ as where large charges of dynamite are used to break up iron machinery within one hundred and fifty feet of a highway.⁹⁸ On the other hand, the use of dynamite may not be inherently dangerous under the facts of the case,⁹⁹ as where the work is done in a barren rural section¹ or where small dynamite charges are used in making a seismograph test not nearer than one hundred feet to buildings.²

Leaving soapy water on sidewalk. While it has been held that the washing of store windows is not within the exception, even though the washing is done in such manner that soapy water runs onto the sidewalk,³ it has also been held that cleaning hotel mats and runners with soap and water on the sidewalk of a busy street in a large city involves danger to pedestrians which a jury might find to be inherent in the work and readily foreseeable.⁴

Painting a sign extending over a sidewalk has been held to be within the exception,⁵ but it is otherwise as to painting the shutters of a house⁶ or painting the interior and exterior of a business building.⁷

Setting fires According to some decisions the burning over of land for the purpose of clearing it is inherently dangerous to other landowners, and the one whose land is being thus cleared cannot evade liability for injuries sustained by another landowner by reason of the fire escaping to his premises, although the work of clearing was done by an independent contractor.⁸ In other decisions, however, a contrary conclusion has been reached.⁹ There is also authority to the effect that whether acts of this character are inherently dangerous depends on the circumstances of the particular case.¹⁰ The matter is not controlled by a statute dealing with the setting of a fire by a hireling;¹¹ and the owner is not liable where the contract for clearing the land did not contemplate the use of fire and he did not know that the contractor intended to resort to that means of removing stumps and debris.¹²

There is authority both for¹³ and against¹⁴ the proposition that the contractee is liable for the damages resulting where, during the performance of a contract for the burning of a protective fireguard along or around certain property, fire is communicated to other property.

Maintenance of fires to keep concrete work from freezing has been held not so intrinsically dangerous as to render the employer of an independent contractor liable for fires destroying adjacent property in the absence of evidence that such act could not be safely performed in the exercise of due care.¹⁵

It has been held that gasoline is essentially a dangerous instrumentality and hence that a person employing an independent contractor to deliver gasoline is liable for damages from a fire arising from the negligence of the independent contractor or his servant,¹⁶ but it has also been held that the contractee is not liable.¹⁷

According to some authorities, where an independent contractor is authorized to use, in performing his work, such dangerous instrumentalities as steam engines, the contractee will be liable for injuries to property of others caused by fire communicated to the property from such engines.¹⁸ In such case the engine is a source of great danger to adjacent property and the danger raises a duty which the contractee cannot shift from himself to another.¹⁹ However, it has been both affirmed²⁰ and de-

nied²¹ that the operation of a steam sawmill is intrinsically dangerous, and it has been held that a steam engine used in digging a well is not in its nature dangerous as an instrumentality likely to set fire to neighboring buildings.²²

Tearing down building or walls The demolition of a complete building which has been used up to the time of demolition, and has not become dangerous or a nuisance through decay or similar conditions, is not intrinsically dangerous,²³ but it has been held otherwise as to the demolition of a building in a crowded section of a city.²⁴ While it has been held that the taking down of a decayed or ruined wall is not intrinsically dangerous, as the only danger to be apprehended is in doing the work carelessly or unskillfully,²⁵ it has also been held that the taking down of a ruined wall is intrinsically and inherently dangerous and that the duty imposed by law on the owner to take down walls left standing by fire as being a menace to the public and the property of persons in the vicinity, and to observe due care in so doing, cannot be delegated to an independent contractor so as to avoid liability for his negligence in doing the work.²⁶

(2) Obstructions, Excavations, or Openings in Public Thoroughfare

The employment of an independent contractor does not prevent a person from being liable for injuries resulting from a failure to guard, or take other reasonable precautions to prevent injury to the public from, excavations, openings, or obstructions in a street, highway, or sidewalk.

A person who employs an independent contractor to do work, on a public way or in a place where the public are habitually and lawfully passing, which will cause danger to the public unless precautions are taken must see that reasonable precautions to prevent injury are taken and is liable for injuries resulting from a failure to take such precautions.²⁷

According to the weight of authority, an excavation in a street, highway, or sidewalk is so inherently dangerous that the person in whose behalf it is made cannot, by having the work done by an independent contractor, escape liability for injuries to others resulting from the contractor's failure properly to guard the excavation or to take other necessary precautions to prevent injury to travelers.²⁸ According to some decisions, however, where a contract is made for work which requires excavation in streets, highways, or sidewalks and reasonable care is used to secure a competent contractor, the contractor alone is liable for injuries sustained by reason of his negligence in failing properly to guard the excavation,²⁹ and where this latter view prevails it is considered that such work is not intrinsically dangerous or hazardous³⁰ and that it becomes an incident to the undertaking of the contractor to do the work in a manner reasonably safe to passers-by, and this duty includes the making of necessary safeguards.³¹

Openings. An abutting owner is liable for a contractor's negligence in leaving unguarded and unlighted openings in the sidewalk.³² So too an occupier of premises who, for his own convenience, maintains a fixed covered opening or aperture in the adjacent sidewalk is liable for injuries resulting from the negligence of an independent contractor in removing the cover and not guarding the opening.³³

Obstructions. While there is some authority to the contrary,³⁴ it has generally been held that, where work to be done under a contract necessarily obstructs and encumbers a public street or highway and renders it unsafe for public travel, unless the obstruction is properly guarded or travelers are otherwise protected, the doctrine of independent contractor does not apply, and liability for injuries resulting from such obstruction is to be determined as though the work had been done by the employer and not by the contractor.³⁵ However, a limitation on this doctrine is that, where the obstruction caused or created in the street or elsewhere is purely collateral to the work contracted to be done, and is entirely the result of the wrongful acts of the contractor or his servants, the contractee is not liable,³⁶ and the contractee is not liable where the obstruction was not the proximate cause of the injury.³⁷

§ 591. — Nondelegable Duties of Contractee

- a. In general
- b. Work done under license, franchise, or corporate charter

a. In General

A person who, by law or contract, is charged with an absolute duty to another person or the public cannot, by delegating performance of that duty to an independent contractor, relieve himself from liability for nonperformance or negligent performance thereof.

One who owes, and is personally bound to perform, an absolute and positive duty to the public or an individual cannot escape the responsibility of seeing that duty performed by delegating it to an independent contractor, and will be liable for injuries resulting from the contractor's negligence in the performance thereof,³⁸ whether the duty is imposed by

Duty arising from doing of act

(1) A person causing something to be done, the doing of which casts on him a duty, cannot escape from responsibility attached to him of seeing that duty performed by delegating it to a contractor

Ala.—W. E. Belcher Lumber Co v Woodstock Land & Mineral Co, 15 So 2d 625, 245 Ala 5

Ky.—Brown Hotel Co v Sizemore, 197 SW 2d 911, 303 Ky. 431

(2) On this theory, where defendant corporation equipped a person with machinery and finances to enter upon its land to engage in mining operation, defendant corporation was under duty, for protection of adjoining landowners, to inform person engaging in mining operations of location of boundaries of its holdings, and if, as proximate result of breach of such duty, person engaged in mining operation went upon plaintiff's adjoining land and took therefrom iron ore, defendant corporation was liable as a joint tort-feasor with person engaging in mining operation in conversion of the ore.—W. E. Belcher Lumber Co v Woodstock Land & Mineral Co, supra.

(3) So too a landowner who undertakes the erection of a building cannot excuse himself for trespass on adjoining property by showing that he gave over the location of the building wholly to his builder with only a general direction to keep inside the boundary line, responsibility in this respect cannot be shifted to an independent contractor.—Bran-

Installation of gas stove

A chemical company from whose representative a gas stove was purchased for installation on yacht could not avoid liability for injuries sustained in an explosion of stove as result of its defective installation on ground that representative was an independent contractor, since the nature of the installation imposed a duty on employer which it could not delegate to a representative.—Grinnell v Carbide & Carbon Chemicals Corporation, 278 NW 535, 282 Mich 509

Duty incident to ownership, possession, or proprietorship

(1) One who owns property that may become dangerous cannot delegate a duty and escape liability for injury incident to his proprietorship.—Galentine v Borglum, 150 SW 2d 1088, 235 Mo 1141

(2) The duty of exercising care is one of those absolute duties which rests on every owner of fixed property, and he cannot shift the responsibility on an independent contractor for failure to perform his duty.—Northcross v Loew's Memphis Theater Co, 3 Tenn App 51

(3) Company owning timber on land leased by owners as a pasture could not delegate its responsibility to use reasonable care not unnecessarily to injure improvements on the land, including the fences, to a third person in such manner as to be relieved of liability.—D L Fair Lumber Co v Weems, 16 So 2d 770, 198 Miss 201, 181 A L R 631

(4) If an independent contractor is employed to perform the nondelegable duty which a possessor of land owes to others to put and maintain land in a reasonably safe condition, the possessor is answerable for harm caused by negligent failure of contractor to put or maintain buildings and structures in reasonably safe condition, irrespective of whether contractor's negligence lies in his incompetence, carelessness, inattention, or delay.—Brown v George Pepperdine Foundation, 143 P 2d 929, 23 Cal 2d 256

(2) An owner of a building has an affirmative nondelegable duty to protect members of public traveling on adjacent sidewalk.—Schwartz v Merola Bros Const Corporation, 48 NE 2d 299, 290 NY 145

(3) The owner or possessor of abutting property for whose special and private benefit a coal hole or similar structure is maintained in a public way cannot cast the burden of the proper maintenance of the structure on another, even though primary negligence with respect to the structure is that of an independent contractor.—Brown Hotel Co v Sizemore, 197 SW 2d 911, 303 Ky 431

Preventing animal from being at large

Where a railroad company had, as a connecting carrier, come into possession of a steer, and the steer was being reloaded into a car, the company owed a duty to the public, under the circumstances, to prevent the animal from being at large and it could not delegate the performance of this duty to an independent contractor and thereby escape liability for nonperformance.—Yazoo & M V R Co v Gordon, 186 So 631, 184 Miss 885

Fitting eyeglasses properly

Where customer purchased glasses in department store without knowledge of arrangement between store and its agent who examined eyes and fitted glasses, act of store was a discharge of its nondelegable duty properly to fit plaintiff with glasses.—Gilbert v Louis Pizitz Dry Goods Co, 186 So 179, 237 Ala. 249.

law³⁹ or by contract,⁴⁰ or, if it is imposed by law, whether it is imposed by the common law,⁴¹ by statute,⁴² or by municipal ordinance,⁴³ and it is of no consequence whether or not the owner exercised care in selecting the contractor⁴⁴ or whether the breach of the employer's duty occurs during the progress of the work or from a defective condition of the work after it is finished⁴⁵

The rule is especially applicable where the contractee personally, or through a servant acting within the scope of his employment, acquires knowledge or is put on notice of a dangerous condition existing during the progress, or after the completion, of the work and fails to remove or correct such condition⁴⁶. However, the negligence of an independent contractor which does not make the result fall short of that which it is the employer's duty to attain is collateral negligence for which the employer is not liable,⁴⁷ and, in respect of a statutory duty, a landowner is not liable, notwithstanding the employment of an independent contractor, where he has complied with the statute in so far as it is applicable to him.⁴⁸ Where a duty is imposed by ordinance on the owner "or" general contractor, the owner is not liable where the duty is in connection with work done by the contractor,⁴⁹ and a statute providing that "any company laying a pipe line under the provisions of the act shall be liable for all damages occasioned by reason of the negligence of such company" does not impose a duty on the company to the public or to individuals such as will render it liable for the injuries caused by the negligence of an independent contractor employed by it.⁵⁰

b. Work Done under License, Franchise, or Corporate Charter

An individual or a corporation cannot evade liability for negligence by delegating performance of work to an independent contractor where such individual or corporation is carrying on an activity, involving danger to others, under a license or franchise granted by public authority and subject to certain obligations or liabilities imposed by public authority.

An individual or a corporation cannot evade liability for negligence by delegating performance of work to an independent contractor where such individual or corporation is carrying on an activity, involving danger to others, under a license or franchise granted by public authority⁵¹ and subject to certain obligations or liabilities imposed by public authority⁵². This rule is often applied where obstructions and excavations in streets and highways are made pursuant to authority derived from, and subject to conditions or requirements imposed by, a statute, municipal ordinance, or permit or license granted by a municipality⁵³.

Chartered power or privilege of corporation. Corporations have been held liable for the wrongful act of an independent contractor while exercising, with the assent of the corporation, some chartered power or privilege of the corporation⁵⁴. However, it has been held that the liability is limited to wrongs done in the performance of acts which could not have been done except for the existence of the charter of the company⁵⁵. If the act is one which might have been done by an individual, no different rule obtains as to liability merely because the contractee is a corporation⁵⁶.

§ 592. — Employment of Incompetent Contractor

An employer who failed to exercise reasonable care to select a competent contractor is liable for injuries sustained by third persons as a result of the negligent or wrongful acts of the contractor.

Although there is some authority to the contrary,⁵⁷ it has generally been held that the duty rests on the employer to select a skilled and competent contractor,⁵⁸ and the employer is liable to third persons for the negligent or wrongful acts of an independent contractor employed by him where he knew his character for negligence, recklessness, or incompetency at the time he employed him,⁵⁹ or where the employer was negligent in failing to exercise reasonable care in the selection of a competent contractor⁶⁰ However, where the independent contractor is in fact a competent person to perform the work, it is of no consequence whether or not due care was used in the selection⁶¹ The fact that a contractor is negligent in respect of the work in question raises no presumption that the employer was guilty of negligence in employing him.⁶²

§ 593. — Active Interference with Work

Where the employer interferes with the performance of the work and assumes control or direction of the method of performing it, the original relation of employer and independent contractor is changed to that of master and servant and the employer becomes liable for injuries resulting from wrongful or negligent acts done in pursuance of his orders or directions

In order that an employer may be shielded from liability by the employment of an independent contractor, the contractor must be allowed to do the work according to his own methods and be subject to control by the employer only as to the results of the work⁶³ The employer is liable for injuries resulting from the acts of one originally an independent contractor where he assumes to control or direct the method of work in whole or in part and the injuries complained of are the result of his interference.⁶⁴ In these circumstances the relation of employer and independent contractor is destroyed⁶⁵ and the relation of master and servant substituted.⁶⁶ This doctrine has been expressly affirmed by statute in some jurisdictions and these provisions may properly be characterized as being merely declaratory of the common law⁶⁷

However, the supervision exercised, or right of supervision reserved, in a particular case by the contractee over the contractor may be of such limited scope as not to make him responsible for the contractor's negligence,⁶⁸ as where it is confined to the purpose of requiring the work to be done in accordance with the contract, or, in other words, extends only to results and not to the manner and method of doing the work,⁶⁹ it is only when the employer goes beyond the limits of his right to supervise results and commits some affirmative act of negligence, as by taking some part in the performance of the work other than such general supervision as is necessary to insure its performance, that he is chargeable.⁷⁰ Also there is not such an assumption of control over, or interference with, the manner of performing the work as to change the relation to that of master and servant and render the employer lia-

§ 594. — Ratification of Contractor's Acts

An employer may become liable for the negligent or wrongful acts of an independent contractor by ratification thereof.

Although not otherwise liable, a contractee may be liable for the negligent or wrongful acts of the contractor or the contractor's servants because of his ratification of such acts.⁷⁵ Nevertheless, the ratification must relate to the wrong itself, and not merely to the authority of the independent contractor to act as such for the employer;⁷⁶ and the mere acceptance by the employer of the benefits naturally flowing from the proper performance by the independent contractor of his contract, and the retention of such benefits with knowledge that the contractor, in the performance of the contract, committed an independent tort, do not amount to a ratification by the employer of the tort itself.⁷⁷

§ 595. — Abandonment, Completion, or Acceptance of Work

The contractee is liable for injuries arising from defects, of which he had knowledge or which would have been disclosed by a reasonable inspection, after the work has been completed or accepted or the contractor has been dismissed or has abandoned the contract and the contractee has assumed control.

Where the contractor is dismissed,⁷⁸ or where he abandons the contract and the owner assumes control,⁷⁹ the contractee's liability attaches as to injuries thereafter resulting from the work done, and if the work is completed the contractee is responsible for injuries thereafter resulting from its imperfect construction or dangerous condition in which he permits it to remain,⁸⁰ especially after the contractee has accepted the work.⁸¹ In these circumstances the general rule is that the responsibility for maintaining defective conditions is shifted to the owner,⁸² and it is of no consequence whether the person performing the work was a servant or an independent contractor.⁸³ The liability of the employer extends to,⁸⁴ and only to,⁸⁵ injuries arising from defects of which he had knowledge or which would have been disclosed by a reasonable inspection in the exercise of ordinary care.

No formal acceptance of the work is necessary to render the employer liable,⁸⁶ acceptance may result from conduct,⁸⁷ and there is a sufficient acceptance where the employer assumes full control of the subject matter of the contract,⁸⁸ or appropriates the structure to the use for which it was erected,⁸⁹ or accepts the work done by the contractor and pays for it.⁹⁰

property from the premises⁹¹

§ 596. — Failure to Remedy Nuisance

An employer is liable for injuries from an unabated nuisance of which he has notice, although he has employed a contractor to abate it or although the necessity of creating a nuisance in order to do the work contracted for was not apparent until the work was in progress.

Liability for maintaining a nuisance continues until the nuisance is abated, although a contractor has been employed to abate it.⁹² Where an employer has no reason to believe that the act contracted to be done is a nuisance, and it turns out during the progress of the work that it is necessary to create a nuisance in order to do the work, then the employer is not liable for injuries to third persons resulting from the nuisance before he had notice of its existence,⁹³ but on receiving such notice he must, in order to protect himself, take such reasonably prompt and efficient means as are in his power to suppress the nuisance.⁹⁴

§ 597. — Joint Wrongful Act of Contractor and Contractee

The contractee is liable for an injury caused by the joint or concurrent negligence of the contractee and himself.

Where the negligence or wrongful act of the contractor joins or concurs with that of the contractee in causing the injury, the contractee is liable.⁹⁵

§ 598. — Subterfuge and Identity of Interest

A master is not relieved of liability for the acts of another employed in fact as a servant, although a contract nominally, and as a subterfuge, created the relation of employer and independent contractor.

The mere nominal employment of an independent contractor will not relieve the master of liability for his torts where he is in fact employed as a servant,⁹⁶ and a contract which on its face creates the relation of independent contractor will not protect the contractee from liability if it is designed as a subterfuge.⁹⁷ Also, where the proprietor of a store permits a luncheonette to be operated by a concessionaire apparently as a part of the store, and employees of the concessionaire are apparently employees of the store, such proprietor has been held to owe to patrons of the luncheonette, while consuming food on the premises, the duty of seeing to it that they are not injured by the negligent acts of such employees.⁹⁸

§ 599. Stipulations as Exempting Contractee from Liability

Stipulations with an independent contractor are ineffective to release the contractor from liability to third persons for injuries sustained.

One who employs another as a contractor cannot release himself from liability for damages by any stipulation with the contractor in so far as the rights of third persons who may be injured are concerned.⁹⁹

§ 600. Liability of Contractee to Servants of Contractor or Subcontractor

Ordinarily the contractee is not liable for injuries to a servant of the independent contractor, or of a subcontractor, caused by the acts or negligence of the independent contractor, a subcontractor, or a coemployee of the injured servant.

Since, as discussed supra § 3 (1), the servant of an independent contractor or of a subcontractor is not a servant of the contractee, ordinarily the con-tractee is not liable for injuries to such servant caused by the acts or negligence of the contractor,¹ or subcontractor,² or coemployee of the injured servant.³ This is true although the workmen thought they were working for the contractee,⁴ but there is also authority apparently to the contrary.⁵ The rule is not affected by a statute making it the duty of owners, contractors, and subcontractors, engaged in designated work, to take designated precautions for the safety of their employees,⁶ since such statutes are intended to apply only to that member of the class enumerated who was engaged in the work designated at the time when the injury occurred.⁷

While the contractee is not absolutely exempt in all cases from liability for injuries to a servant of the contractor or subcontractor,⁸ there being exceptions, discussed infra §§ 601-606, to the general rule of nonliability, nevertheless he is not liable unless he owed some duty to the employee,⁹ he failed to perform that duty,¹⁰ and such nonperformance was the proximate cause of the injury.¹¹ The contractee does not owe to the employees of the independent contractor the same duties he owes to his own employees.¹² So too the duties which a contractee owes to employees of the independent contractor are less than those owing to third persons;¹³ and consequently his liability to such employees is not as extensive as his liability to third persons, that is, the act may be such as to render the contractee liable to third persons although it would not make him liable to a servant of the contractor.¹⁴

Negligence of another independent contractor or his servants. As a corollary of the rule that the contractee is not liable for injuries to servants of the contractor caused by the negligence of the contractor, it may be stated that the contractee is not liable for injuries to the contractor's servants due to the negligence of another independent contractor¹⁵ or of his employees¹⁶. He is under no obligation to protect the servants of one contractor from the negligence of the servants of another¹⁷. In order to make the owner liable in such a case there must have been some negligence on his own part,¹⁸ or a failure on his part to perform some duty imposed on him by express contractual provision,¹⁹ or an interference by him with the prosecution of the work.²⁰

Identity of interest. Where the interests of a contractor and contractee are such as to show they are one and the same, the contractee will be liable to the servants of the contractor as though they were his own.²¹

§ 601. — Negligence of Contractee or His Servants

A contractee is liable for injuries sustained, during the course of his employment, by a servant of an independent contractor or subcontractor by reason of the negligence of the contractee, or of his servants, acting within the scope of their employment, or by the combined fault of the contractor and contractee.

Where injuries are sustained by the servant of an independent contractor or subcontractor during the course of his employment, by reason of the negligence of the contractee,²² or of his servants, acting within the scope of their employment,²³ or by the combined fault of the contractor and the contractee,²⁴ the contractee will be liable, there being no contractual²⁵ assumption of risk by the injured servant in such case,²⁶ but if the servant of the contractee was not acting within the scope of his employment at the time of the injury complained of the contractee will not be liable.²⁷ A contract between the owner and the contractor will not be construed as indemnifying the owner as against his own negligence in the absence of an express stipulation to that effect.²⁸

A contractee may be liable for injury to an employee of an independent contractor resulting from the negligence of that or another independent contractor where he failed to exercise reasonable care in the selection of a competent contractor or contractors,²⁹ but not in the absence of negligence in that respect,³⁰ and it has been held that knowledge of the incompetency of the contractor does not make the contractee liable to a servant of the contractor for injuries resulting therefrom.³¹ So too, where construction work was being done by an independent contractor according to plans furnished by the contractee, the latter may be liable for injuries to an employee of the contractor when,³² and only when,³³ the plans were defective and the injuries resulted proximately from the defects.

Duty as to plans

§ 602. — Retention or Assumption of Control of Work

An employer who reserves the right to direct the manner of performing the details of the work, or interferes and assumes control, may become liable for an injury to a servant of the contractor.

Where an employer reserves the right to direct the performance of the work, he owes to the employees of the contractor the duty of ordinary care in directing such matters.³⁴ Also an employer of an independent contractor may become liable for an injury to a servant of the contractor by interfering and assuming control.³⁵ If an employer in fact assumes the relation of master to the servants of one whom he has engaged to produce a given result, the duties and responsibilities which the law imposes on such a relation attach.³⁶ On the other hand, the contractee has been held not to be liable where it does not appear that he had a right to, or did, direct the manner of performing the details of the work.³⁷ He does not incur a liability in respect of an injury to a servant of the contractor by reason of the mere fact that he furnishes an inspector or overseer,³⁸ or reserves, or exercises

under a reservation, a superintendency over the work to see that it is done according to the specifications of the contract,³⁹ even though, for that purpose, he reserves the right to object to the employment of servants selected by the contractor⁴⁰ or to stop the work if it is not being properly done.⁴¹ Furthermore, the contractee is not rendered liable by the fact that he or his representative makes suggestions concerning the work⁴² or gives a noncompulsory direction to an employee of the contractor to do promptly an act within the scope of the servant's employment and of the work undertaken by the contractor, the direction being purely supervisory and intended to coordinate the work in the interest of speed.⁴³

§ 603. — Safety of Place to Work

One who is having work done on his premises by an independent contractor, and who retains control of the premises during the progress of the work, is under an obligation to use ordinary care to keep the premises in a reasonably safe condition for the servants of the contractor.

The contractee is liable for injuries to servants of a contractor or subcontractor resulting from breach of a duty imposed by contract⁴⁴ or statute⁴⁵ to provide a safe place to work

The weight of authority supports the rule that, independently of contract or statute, one who is having work done on his premises by an independent contractor is under the obligation to use ordinary care to keep the premises in a reasonably safe condition for the servants of the contractor,⁴⁶ especially where the work is of an exceptionally dangerous character,⁴⁷ and in some jurisdictions where this view prevails it has been held that the contractee owes the same duty to the servants of the contractor as he owes to his own employees,⁴⁸ while in others the duty which the contractee owes to the servants of the contractor is the duty which he owes to any invitee lawfully on his premises,⁴⁹ except where, by going on a part of the premises other than that where the construction work is in progress, an employee of the contractor loses his status as an ininvitee and becomes a licensee, in which case the contractee owes him only the duty of refraining from acts willfully injurious.⁵⁰ Nevertheless, if the employer of an independent contractor furnishes to the latter reasonably safe premises as measured by the usual manner of doing work, the employer is not liable to servants of the contractor for injury,⁵¹ and, if under such conditions injury to employees results, it will be deemed caused by negligence of the contractor.⁵² The owner is not liable for injury to, or death of, an employee of a contractor or subcontractor, on the ground that he furnished such employee an unsafe place to work, where the employee was injured or killed because of conditions he was correcting or defects he was repairing.⁵³ The duty of a mine owner to an employee of an independent contractor, working therein, to keep the mine in reasonably safe condition extends only to conditions existing when the mine was turned over to the contractor, not to those arising from changes caused by the progress of the work the contractor undertook to do.⁵⁴

According to some authorities the obligation to furnish a safe place in which to work applies only when the relation of master and servant exists, and the owner of premises on which an independent contractor is doing work is in general under no obligation to the latter's employees to see that they have a safe place to work.⁵⁵

Effect of control of premises Where the contractee retains control of the premises on which the work is being done, it is his duty to use reasonable care to keep them in a reasonably safe condition and he will be liable for injuries to servants of the contractor resulting from a breach of his duty,⁵⁶ especially where the contractee gives the workmen the right to understand that he is caring for their safety and that they may rely on him to guard against negligent conduct in the contractors and others,⁵⁷ but, where the working place is furnished and maintained by the independent contractor, possession of the site having been delivered to him for the purpose of constructing a building, the owner owes the employees only the negative duty, imposed by law, of refraining from rendering the place unsafe by any act of his own,⁵⁸ and not an affirmative duty to keep the premises safe for the workmen.⁵⁹

§ 604. — Safety of Appliances or Work

A contractee is liable for injuries to an employee of an independent contractor resulting from a defective or unsafe appliance or instrumentality when, but only when, he furnished the appliance or instrumentality, or was under a contractual or statutory obligation to do so, and failed to use ordinary care to furnish a proper appliance reasonably safe for the intended use.

A contractee is not liable for injuries to an employee of an independent contractor arising from a defective or unsafe appliance or instrumentality where he was not obligated⁶⁰ by contract⁶¹ or statute⁶² to furnish the appliance or instrumentality, and did not in fact assume to furnish it,⁶³ even though the appliance belonged to him⁶⁴ and was used with⁶⁵ or without⁶⁶ his consent.

quired by contract⁶⁸ or statute⁶⁹ to furnish it, and failed to exercise ordinary care to furnish a proper appliance reasonably safe for the intended use. In these circumstances it has been said that the duty of the contractor to the servants of the employer is the same as that which he owes to his own servants.⁷⁰ Liability is avoided where the contractee furnishes to a competent contractor appliances which are apparently good, sufficient, and satisfactory,⁷¹ and, while there is some authority to the contrary,⁷² it has generally been held that if reasonably safe appliances are furnished, and they afterward become defective, the contractee is not liable⁷³ unless the contract requires continued supervision of the appliances and the keeping of them in repair, in which event a breach of duty by the contractee will render him liable for injuries to the contractor's servant resulting therefrom.⁷⁴

Although the contractee is bound by agreement to furnish appliances, he need not keep watch of the work to determine when appliances are necessary,⁷⁵ his duty is fulfilled by delivering suitable appliances on the contractor's request, or by providing such appliances at a place where the contractor can secure them on demand.⁷⁶

Negligent use of appliances Where suitable appliances are furnished by the contractee, he is not liable for injuries resulting from a negligent use thereof.⁷⁷

§ 605. — Materials Furnished by Contractee

The contractee is liable for injuries to servants of the contractor arising from the contractee's failure to perform, or his negligent or inadequate performance of, his agreement to furnish materials connected with the work.

Where the contractee agrees to furnish materials to be used in the performance of the work, or to be used in making the place safe for work, and by reason of his failure to do so, or of his negligent or inadequate performance of his duty in this respect, the servants of the contractor are injured, the contractee will be liable.⁷⁸ However, where the materials furnished by the owner are rejected by the employees of the contractor, and such employees select other materials belonging to the owner, the latter is not liable for an injury resulting from the use of such other materials,⁷⁹ and if materials for a scaffold are selected by servants of the contractor, with the consent of the contractee, but in the absence of any agreement with respect thereto, from lumber on the premises, and the scaffold breaks, the contractee is not liable,⁸⁰ especially where it is not shown that proper lumber could not have been found on the premises.⁸¹

§ 606. — Latent or Potential Dangers; Warnings and Instructions

A person who is having work done on his premises by an independent contractor, and has actual or constructive knowledge of latent or potential dangers on the premises, owes a duty to give warning of, or use ordinary care to furnish protection against, such dangers to employees of the contractor and subcontractors who are without actual or constructive notice of the dangers.

or perilous condition attaching on the service,⁸² or where the premises on which the work to be done by an independent contractor are potentially unsafe by reason of a dangerous element in use thereon,⁸³ or where there is some hidden danger connected with the condition of the premises which the owner or occupier having the work done knows or should know of, and of which the servants of the independent contractor or subcontractor do not have actual or constructive notice,⁸⁴ the owner or occupier owes a duty to use reasonable care to protect the servants from the danger, and he will be liable for injuries sustained by a servant who has not been duly warned of the danger.⁸⁵ However, except where the contractee has assumed the duty of giving warning or otherwise affording protection,⁸⁶ the foregoing is true only in respect of latent dangers of which the servant of the contractor or subcontractor did not know and could not reasonably have discovered and of which the contractee knew or should have known.⁸⁷ The contractee performs his duty by giving due notice or warning,⁸⁸ and, except for hidden defects,⁸⁹ he is not required to alter the premises to make them safe for employees of a contractor or subcontractor.⁹⁰

There is authority for the view that the benefit of the rule, discussed supra § 590 a, that liability cannot be evaded by employing an independent contractor to do work which is inherently or intrinsically dangerous, unless proper precautions are taken, extends to an employee of an independent contractor,⁹¹ but there is also authority for the opposite view where the danger is not increased by any negligent act or omission of the contractee.⁹² At any rate, the contractee may not be held liable by application of this rule where the work was not inherently dangerous.⁹³

dangerous when operated by one not properly instructed, the contractee is liable to an employee of the contractor injured thereby because not properly instructed as to its use.⁹⁴ Where an electric light plant is in actual operation, a contract with the constructors that they are to keep a man in charge for a specified time to make adjustments and instruct attendants does not leave the possession in the hands of the latter during such period, so as to absolve the company from liabilities resulting from negligence to the servant of an independent contractor.⁹⁵

§ 607. Liability of Contractee for Injuries to Contractor

An independent contractor is expected to determine for himself whether the place in which he chooses to work is safe or unsafe; and ordinarily he may not recover against the contractee for injuries sustained by him in the performance of the contract.

The liability, if any, of a contractee for injuries to an independent contractor employed by him is the same as that imposed on him in respect of injuries to third persons generally.⁹⁶ He is not liable as master of the independent contractor even in respect of injuries inflicted by one of his contractors on another;⁹⁷ but it has been held that one who hires an independent contractor to do some work for him owes such independent contractor the same duty of care as though he were an employee hired to perform the same kind of service.⁹⁸ Ordinarily the contractee is not liable for injuries sustained by the contractor in performance of the contract,⁹⁹ but if the employer retains the right of control a different rule applies.¹ Where the contractor supplies his own instrumentalities for doing the work agreed on, the contractee owes no duty to him to use care to see that such instrumentalities are not defective;² but where the contractee agrees or undertakes to furnish,³ and retains control of,⁴ the appliances or instrumentalities for doing the work he must use due care to the end that the appliances furnished are reasonably safe for the purposes for which they are furnished. Also ordinarily a contractee does not owe to the contractor the duty to furnish him a reasonably safe place to work,⁵ and the contractor is expected to determine for himself whether the place in which he chooses to work is safe or unsafe;⁶ but it has been recognized that the owner may be liable under particular circumstances where a duty devolving on him is not performed,⁷ as in the case of a duty arising from his undertaking to furnish, and retention of possession and control over, the place where the contract is to be performed.⁸

While a person having work done on his premises by an independent contractor should exercise reasonable care to protect the contractor from dangers arising from the condition of the premises, concerning which he is aware, and concerning which the contractor has neither actual nor constructive notice,⁹ this is true only of latent dangers of which the contractee knows or should know and of which the contractor does not know and could not reasonably discover.¹⁰

The contractee is liable for an injury occasioned by his own negligence¹¹ or by the wrongful act of

§ 608. Liability of Contractors

As a possessor of real estate while in charge of reconstruction work, a general contractor is liable for personal injuries sustained by an independent contractor and arising from the artificial condition of the premises if, but only if, he had no reason to believe that the independent contractor would discover the perilous condition and realize the risk involved.

As a possessor of real estate while in charge of the reconstruction of a building, a general contractor is liable to an independent contractor who, as a business visitor to the premises, sustained personal injuries occasioned by the artificial condition of the premises, if he had no reason to believe that the person injured would discover the condition or realize the risk involved,¹³ but not where he had no superior knowledge of the perilous condition and he had every reason to believe that the independent contractor would discover the condition and realize the risk involved.¹⁴ Where there was active negligence on the part of the contractor or his servants, and a direct act of negligence caused an injury which any reasonably prudent person should have foreseen, the contractor is liable even though he was never in occupation or control of the property, this having been always in the owner and the contrac-

tor's servants having been on the property by invitation and permission of the owner¹⁵

The general liability of a contractor for injuries resulting from his negligence is discussed in the C J S title Negligence § 95, also 45 C J. p 883 note 5-p 885 note 39, and the similar liability of a subcontractor in the C J S title Negligence § 96, also 45 C J. p 886 notes 44-55. The liability of a contractor for the acts or omissions of a subcontractor is discussed infra § 609, and his liability for injuries to servants of a subcontractor or another independent contractor infra § 610.

§ 609. — For Acts or Omissions of Subcontractors

An independent contractor is not liable for injuries occasioned by the negligent acts or omissions of his subcontractor unless the circumstances bring the case within some exception to the rule.

Where it is sought to hold a contractor liable for injuries caused by the negligence of his subcontractor, the same rule applies as where it is attempted to hold the owner liable for injuries resulting from the negligence of the contractor¹⁶ An independent contractor is not liable for injuries occasioned by the negligent acts or omissions of his subcontractor,¹⁷ or of the latter's servants,¹⁸ unless the circumstances bring the case within some exception to the general rule,¹⁹ as where the work delegated to the construction of the building, and cooperation in its construction is necessary between them, and that part of the construction undertaken by the subcontractor is concurrently and conjointly done with the remaining portion of the work which is under the control of the original contractor, they are jointly liable to persons injured by reason of their negligence.³⁰

§ 610. — For Injuries to Each Other's Servants

Where two or more independent contractors, or a general contractor and one or more subcontractors, are engaged in work on the same premises, it is the duty of each contractor, in prosecuting his work, to use ordinary and reasonable care not to cause injuries to the servants of another contractor,³¹ and an employee of one contractor may recover against another contractor for injuries caused by the negligence of the latter contractor, or of his employees acting within the scope of their employment, in the performance of a duty owed by such contractor to the injured employee.³² It is, however, essential to recovery that defendant shall have owed a duty to plaintiff which was neglected or breached³³ and, where the negligent act was that of a servant of defendant, that it was within the scope of his employment.³⁴ Ordinarily the general contractor or other contractor sued is not liable to an employee of a subcontractor or another independent contractor for injuries caused by the negligent act or omission of plaintiff's employer,³⁵ since there is no duty on the part of a general contractor to protect the employee of an independent contractor against the negligence of his own employer,³⁶ but he is not absolutely exempt from liability in all cases,³⁷ and he has been held liable for a breach of duty where he procured the independent contractor to do work involving the use of a dangerous instrumentality.³⁸

A contractor does not owe to the employees of a subcontractor the same duties he owes to his own employees.³⁹ He owes to the employee of a subcontractor no higher duty than he owes to his own employees,⁴⁰ and he is not obligated to exercise any greater degree of care for the safety of such employee than the employee is willing to exercise for his own safety.⁴¹

Where construction work is in charge of several contractors and their workmen, each independent of the other, and none of them is subject to the control and direction of the other, each contractor is responsible only for the negligence of his own servants and not the negligence of the servants of other contractors resulting in injury to the servant of one contractor.⁴²

Warning. A general or independent contractor has no duty to warn an employee of a subcontractor or another independent contractor of a danger which is obvious⁴³ or is known and appreciated by the employee⁴⁴

Safe place to work. No duty to furnish or provide a reasonably safe place to work is owed by an independent contractor to an employee of another independent contractor,⁴⁵ and, according to some authorities, this is also true, in the absence of special circumstances, in respect of this duty when claimed to be owing by a contractor to his subcontractor,⁴⁶ but other authorities take the opposite view.⁴⁷ It has been held, on the one hand, that a subcontractor has no duty to furnish an employee of the general contractor a safe place to work,⁴⁸ and, on the other hand, that a subcontractor owes a duty to an employee of the general contractor to use reasonable care to keep and maintain the premises, and the structure wherein the employee is required to work, in a safe condition.⁴⁹

C. ACTIONS

§ 611. Nature and Form

Case, rather than trespass, ordinarily is the appropriate remedy against an employer for injuries resulting from the negligence of an employee; but trespass may lie where the master ordered the commission of the wrongful act of an employee.

An action on the case ordinarily is the proper⁵⁰ and only⁵¹ remedy which will lie for injuries committed by a servant, in the course of his master's business, which resulted from negligence or want of proper care or skill on the part of the servant. Also, where a servant is commanded by the master to do a lawful act and he does it in an unlawful way so as to injure another, the latter may have his remedy by an action on the case.⁵² If the action is brought against the master and servant jointly, the form of the action is in case.⁵³

Trespass is generally held not the proper remedy for an injury occasioned by the wrongful act of defendant's servant or agent, for which defendant is liable,⁵⁴ at least when the force causing the injury was not directly applied by the employer, or authorized or ratified by him.⁵⁵ So it has been held that, where a servant, while in the actual employment of the master, commits a willful trespass, without either the authority or implied assent of the master, the latter cannot be made liable in trespass.⁵⁶ However, trespass will lie where the master orders the commission of an act resulting in the injury complained of, or where the act is unlawful in itself,⁵⁷ and it will also lie where the injuries resulted from acts of violence committed under the orders of the master,⁵⁸ or where the act is committed under an order of the master to do an act implying the use of force and personal violence.⁵⁹

Action on bond of police officer. Where an officer is not considered the servant of the person requesting his appointment, such as a special policeman in some states, the remedy is on the bond given by the person securing his appointment.⁶⁰

§ 612. Grounds of Action, Conditions Precedent, and Defenses

The general grounds on which the action against the master for the acts of his servant may be based, and the substantive rules of law on which the master may predicate his defense to such an action, have been discussed supra § 555 et seq

In an action by a third person based on injuries caused by the negligence of a servant, the servant is not a necessary party to an action against the master, nor is the master a necessary party to an action against the servant.

In an action for injuries to a third person caused by the negligence of a servant, the servant is not a necessary party to an action against the master based on such negligence,⁶¹ nor is the master a necessary party to an action against the servant.⁶² As discussed supra § 579, there is a conflict of authority on the question whether the master and servant can be sued jointly where the liability of the master is based solely on the doctrine of respondeat superior. Where the employment is joint, so that several are liable as masters, any one of them may be sued alone.⁶³ Where liability for injuries to third persons due to a failure to take proper precautions cannot be evaded by employing an independent contractor to do the work, as in cases where work is intrinsically dangerous unless proper precautions are taken, the employer and contractor may be sued jointly.⁶⁴

Use of fictitious name. Under a statute authorizing the naming of a fictitious defendant in a complaint and providing for an amendment to show his true name when it is discovered, it has been held that plaintiff can name a fictitious person as employer of a named defendant, even though plaintiff does not know, when he files the complaint, that any relation of respondeat superior in fact exists.⁶⁵

was the proximate cause of the injury,⁷⁵ although it has been held unnecessary to allege the particular acts which constituted negligence.⁷⁶ In a jurisdiction in which an employee, although liable to third persons for his acts of misfeasance, is not liable for mere omissions or nonfeasances, a petition which does not charge the employee with active negligence has been held insufficient as to such a defendant.⁷⁷ It has been asserted that, when the injury or loss results from active force applied, and arises under the doctrine of respondeat superior, the rules of good pleading require that the complaint by way of inducement show the instrumentality causing the injury, and that the agent or servant to whose acts negligence is ascribed had actual manual control of such instrumentality or was present directing its movement.⁷⁸

Designation of guilty servant. It is generally held that the complaint need not designate or name the particular servant guilty of the negligence.⁷⁹ There is, however, some authority to the effect that, in alleging specific negligence, an averment as to the particular servants whose negligence is complained of is necessary.⁸⁰

Construction. In the interpretation of the complaint, the entire pleading should be considered and construed as a whole.⁸¹

(2) Master's Responsibility for, or Connection with, Injury

(a) In general

(b) Scope of employment; furtherance of master's interests

(a) In General

The complaint must allege facts showing the master's responsibility for the injury, and, where liability is based on the relation of master and servant, facts must be alleged showing the existence of such relationship.

In order to state a cause of action against defendant for a wrong committed by his servant, the ultimate fact necessary to be alleged is that the wrongful act was in legal effect committed by defendant.⁸² This may be alleged either by alleging that defendant by his servant committed the act,⁸³ or, without noticing the servant, by alleging that defendant committed the act.⁸⁴ An allegation that an act was done by defendant's servants, agents, or employees does not show a participation by defendant, but rests alone on the doctrine of respondeat superior.⁸⁵

Existence of relation of master and servant. A complaint seeking to charge one person for the tortious act of another on the ground that the person causing the injury was the employee of the other must contain allegations showing the existence of

because it showed that plaintiff was criminal trespasser and did not allege that police used more force in removing plaintiff than was necessary under circumstances—Kent v. Southern Ry. Co., 184 S.E. 688, 52 Ga. App. 781.

the relationship of master and servant,⁸⁶ and also that such relationship existed at the time of the injury⁸⁷ and with respect to the particular transaction from which the tort arose.⁸⁸ Nevertheless, a direct averment of these facts is not necessary,⁸⁹ and it is sufficient to allege the facts which establish such relationship.⁹⁰ Where liability is sought to be imposed under the doctrine of emergency employment of the person responsible for causing the injuries, the facts averred must show that an emergency existed.⁹¹

Selection or retention of incompetent servant or contractor. Ordinarily, the master's negligence in selecting the servant need not be alleged in an action for injuries to a third person inflicted by a servant.⁹² However, in an action for assault wherein a third person seeks to hold an employer liable for engaging and retaining an employee having vicious propensities, the complaint must contain allegations showing a causal connection between the negligence of the employer in hiring and retaining such an employee, and the injuries sustained by plaintiff.⁹³ A

pleading wherein plaintiff seeks to impose liability on one who engaged an independent contractor to do a certain piece of work, for the consequences of such work being done negligently, must contain allegations showing that defendant did not exercise due care to secure a competent contractor.⁹⁴

(b) Scope of Employment, Furtherance of Master's Interests

In an action against a master by a third person for injuries sustained through the act of a servant, the complaint ordinarily must contain allegations showing that the act was within the scope of the servant's employment, or was authorized or ratified by the master.

Ordinarily, in an action by a third person seeking to recover damages from the master for injuries resulting from the tortious act of a servant, the allegations of the complaint must show that the act complained of was within the scope of the servant's employment or in furtherance of the master's business or interests,⁹⁵ or else that defendant specially

Where a person is said to be an employee of another, and the nature of the employment, together with the duties connected therewith, is given, and it is further alleged that, at the time of the accident such employee was on an errand or mission of his employer, the petition discloses a cause of action, even though it is alleged that plaintiff does not know the particular duties then beauthorized⁹⁶ or ratified⁹⁷ the act. Where it appears that the act was within the scope of the servant's authority it is not necessary to allege that the negligent act complained of was in the interest of the master, or that it was in the prosecution of the master's business⁹⁸.

An allegation that the tortious act was committed by a named individual, the servant of defendant, has been held insufficient unless accompanied by other allegations showing that the acts were within the course and scope of the servant's employment,⁹⁹ but an allegation that "defendant by its servant or agent" committed the tortious act, or words to that effect, is sufficient without further amplifying it by adding that the servant was acting within the scope of his employment.¹ The petition must be construed in the light of the facts set forth, and not solely in view of a bare allegation, in the nature of a conclusion, that the act of the employee was done in the scope of his employment,² and, where the specific allegations of the petition plainly negative the general charge that the acts complained of were in the prosecution of the master's business, and within the scope of the servant's employment, the specific averments will prevail.³ The particular words "within the scope of his employment" are not indispensable,⁴ any language of equivalent import, conveying the meaning that the servant was in fact acting within the scope of his employment and in pursuance of the master's business, will suffice.⁵

Where a willful and intentional injury by the servant is charged, a failure of the complaint to show that he was acting within the scope of his employment or in furtherance of his master's business or interests renders it insufficient.⁶ A direct averment in terms to this effect is unnecessary if it ap-

There is authority holding that it is not necessary for the pleading to amplify the allegation of the ultimate fact that the act was committed while the servant was engaged in his master's business and in furtherance of the master's interests,⁹ but other authorities hold that facts must be stated to show that the act was within the scope of the servant's employment,¹⁰ since the general averment that the acts were within the scope is considered insufficient because it is a mere conclusion of law.¹¹ A general demurrer is properly sustained to a petition containing a general averment that the act complained of was in the prosecution of the master's business and within the scope of the manager's authority, where the petition also contains a specific allegation showing that the acts complained of were committed by the servant in his personal capacity.¹²

b. Plea or Answer

Plea or answers in actions against a master to recover for injuries sustained by a third person through the acts of a servant or independent contractor engaged by him are governed by the general rules pertaining to a defendant's pleadings in civil actions.

The general rules prevailing in other actions apply to pleas or answers in actions against the master to recover for injuries sustained through the acts of his servants.¹³ Where liability of the employer is predicated on the doctrine of respondeat superior, a defense pleaded by the employee which is not personal to him, but goes to the merits of the case, inures to the benefit of the employer.¹⁴ In at least one jurisdiction, in actions of trespass for personal injuries, a defendant who wishes to deny the averments in a statement of claim as to the person by whom the act was committed, the agency or employment of such person, the ownership or possession of the vehicle, machinery, property, or instrumentality involved, or any similar averment, must do so in an affidavit of defense, or else such averments will be taken to be admitted,¹⁵ but in this connection it has been held that only averments of fact contained in plaintiff's statement of claim, and not legal conclusions, are admitted by failure to file an affidavit of defense.¹⁶

Independent contractor. Where a declaration in an action against an employer for injuries sustained through work done by an independent contractor alleges facts which bring the case within an exception to the general rule exempting the employer for injuries inflicted by an independent contractor or his employee, a plea which fails to deny the allegations which bring the case within an exception to the general rule is insufficient.¹⁷ However, the defense of independent contractor is not an affirmative defense and need not be specially pleaded;¹⁸ it may be raised under a general denial.¹⁹

29. Ill—Shaw v Dorris, 124 N.E 796, 290 Ill. 196.

In accordance with principles considered supra subdivision a (2) of this section, where defendant is charged with negligently inflicting injuries, evidence that the injuries complained of were committed by his servant is admissible,³⁰ but evidence that the master participated in the negligent act of the servant by directing the latter to do or perform the act is not admissible since it would operate to change the master's act from negligence to willfulness,³¹ and, where suit is brought jointly against the master and servant for negligence, there can be no recovery where the proof shows negligence on the part of the servant only.³² Where the complaint proceeds on the theory of case, not trespass, and seeks to fasten liability on defendant on the doctrine of respondeat superior for the wrong of the servant, proof of defendant's participation in the wrongful acts is unnecessary.³³

*Under the general issue or denial evidence tending to disprove the injury complained of is admissible.*³⁴ While there is some authority to the contrary,³⁵ it has usually been held that, under a plea of the general issue or general denial, defendants may show that the relation of master and servant between themselves and the person causing the injury did not exist,³⁶ as for instance, that the person responsible for the injury complained of was an independent contractor.³⁷ It may also be shown under that pleading that the servant was not acting within the scope of his employment at the time of the injury.³⁸ Where the basis of the action is an assault by defendant's servant, it may be shown under the general issue that plaintiff assaulted the servant first and that the latter acted in self-defense.³⁹

a. Presumptions

In an action against a master for injuries sustained by a third person, the facts may give rise to a presumption that the one causing the injury was a servant of another and acting within the scope of his employment; but the mere fact that a servant is in the general employment of a master does not alone necessarily create a presumption that his acts were within the scope of his employment.

As a general rule, in the absence of evidence on the subject, no presumption exists that an employee is either a servant or an independent contractor.⁴⁰ The facts may, however, raise a presumption that a person causing injury to another was in the employ of defendant at the time of the injury.⁴¹ Thus a person who is performing work and labor for another,⁴² or who is in possession of property of an-

Limits of rule

The issue raised by the plea of not guilty in an action of tort is whether or not defendant in person or by means of agency did the wrongful act charged, or suffered the breach of duty alleged, and, where agency is alleged in the declaration, such agency is not put in issue by the plea of not guilty, but it does not follow that plaintiff is excused from proving either that defendant himself, or his servant, or his instrumentality was involved in the wrongful acts where the plea of not guilty is interposed.—*Dowling v. Presumptions as to employment generally see supra § 12.

Going to, or coming from, work

In determining liability of an employer for negligence of an employee while he is going to, or coming from, work, if the employer pays transportation expenses of the employee, it is a possible, although not conclusive, inference that the employer has impliedly agreed that service to him shall start from the time the employee leaves home and shall continue until he arrives back at his home.—Breland v Traylor Engineering & Manufacturing Co, 136 P.2d 455, 52 Cal.App.2d 415.

other and uses it in the service of the owner,⁴³ is presumed to be a servant of such other person. If the master is being driven by the servant, it may be inferred without other proof that the latter is engaged in the master's business and is subject to his control.⁴⁴ Where one is employed generally to perform certain services for another, and there is no specific contract to do a certain piece of work according to specifications for a stipulated sum, it is inferable that the employer has retained the right to control the manner, method, and means of the performance of the contract, and that the employee is not an independent contractor.⁴⁵

The fact that an independent contractor was negligent in respect of the work he was engaged to do affords no presumption that the employer was guilty of negligence in having engaged him.⁴⁶ Where the customary violation of a safety rule has continued so long that the master either knew of it, or by the exercise of ordinary care could have known of it, and he acquiesced in it, he is presumed to have consented to its repeal or to have waived obedience to it.⁴⁷

Scope of employment. The mere fact that a servant is in the general employment of a master does not alone necessarily give rise to a presumption that a given act done by him was within the scope of his employment,⁴⁸ especially where there is direct proof to the contrary.⁴⁹ The particular facts may, however, give rise to a presumption that the servant was acting within the scope of his employment.⁵⁰ Thus, if the injury occurred while one was employed in the Ordinary services for wages

Bicyclist delivering groceries

In action against bicycle rider and his alleged employer for injuries sustained when plaintiff was struck by bicycle, evidence that accident occurred during usual business hours of alleged employer, and was result of negligence of bicycle rider employed to deliver groceries for alleged employer, gave rise to presumption that bicycle rider was working for alleged employer at time of accident—Greene v Pennamgton, 108 S.W.2d 1013, 270 Ky. 28.

Contractor and subcontractor

In action by landowners for flooding as result of dirt embankment which was placed on land by one company while performing work

Possession of vehicle

At common law the possession of a vehicle gave rise to a presumption that the driver was on the owner's business—Pariso v Towse, C.C.A.N.Y., 45 F 2d 962

Messenger boy in uniform

A presumption that a telegraph messenger was acting within the course and scope of his employment may arise from the fact that he was dressed in the uniform of a telegraph company messenger boy at the time his bicycle struck a pedestrian.

usual course, and for the benefit of the owner, a presumption may arise that the servant was acting within the scope of his authority.⁵¹

A servant may be presumed to have been acting in the course of his employment, wherever it appears, not only that his master was owner of the given instrumentality, but also that, at the time when the alleged tort was committed, it was being used under conditions resembling those which normally attended its use in connection with the master's business.⁵² The master's assent to acts of his servant which do not amount to a turning aside completely from the master's business, so as to be inconsistent with its purpose, and which are only such as might be reasonably expected, may be fairly assumed.⁵³ A presumption raised by the evidence that a servant was acting within the scope of his authority about his master's business ordinarily is rebuttable and subject to be overcome by proof to the contrary.⁵⁴

Dual capacity of servant and special officer. Where an officer is commissioned at the request of a corporation to guard its property and is paid by it, acts done by him will be presumed to have been performed in his capacity as officer in the absence of evidence to show the contrary.⁵⁵

Hiring out of employee. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, there is an inference that the servant remains in his general employment as long as, by the service rendered another, he is performing the business intrusted to him by his general employer,⁵⁶ as long as the employee is furthering the business of his general employer by the service rendered to another, there will be no inference of a new relation unless command has been surrendered.⁵⁷ When a master hires out the services of an employee for the operation of an instrumentality owned by the master, without relinquishing to the hirer the power to discharge such servant, the legal presumption is that, although the hirer directs the servant where to go and what to do in the performance of the work, the servant remains, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, the servant of the general employer in so far as concerns the operation of the instrumentality.⁵⁸ In the absence of proof that the general employer has surrendered control completely, it must be presumed that his control continued,⁵⁹ since there is no inference that because the general employer has permitted a division of command or control he has surrendered it.⁶⁰

b. Burden of Proof

The burden is on plaintiff to establish the liability of the master by showing, for example, that the relation of master and servant existed at the time of the injury with respect to the particular transaction in question, and that the servant acted within the scope of his employment. The burden is on defendant to rebut a prima facie case.

In an action to recover from a master for injuries inflicted by his servant, plaintiff must establish all the facts out of which the master's liability is claimed to rest.⁶⁴ So, ordinarily the burden is on plaintiff to show that the person whose act caused the injury was the servant of defendant,⁶⁵ that the relation existed at the time of the injury⁶⁶ and with respect to the particular transaction from which the tort arose,⁶⁷ and that the servant acted within the scope or course of his employment.⁶⁸ The burden is also on plaintiff to show negligence on the part of defendant's servants,⁶⁹ and that it was the cause of plaintiff's injury.⁷⁰

If the action is based on the employment of an incompetent servant, the burden is on plaintiff to show that the servant was in fact incompetent⁷¹ and that defendant knew or could have known of such incompetency by the exercise of reasonable diligence.⁷² Where plaintiff seeks to fasten liability on defendant under the emergency servant doctrine, it is part of plaintiff's case to establish the emergency which necessitated the calling of an assistant.⁷³ A plaintiff claiming that the wrongful acts of an employee were ratified by the employer has the burden of so proving.⁷⁴ In an action against a servant for wrongful conversion the burden has been held to be on plaintiff to show that, although acting under the direction of the master, the servant knew that his act was in effect a conversion.⁷⁵

The burden rests on defendant to rebut a prima facie case or showing made by plaintiff.⁷⁶ De-

Status of messenger boy

Where evidence established that, at time bicycle struck pedestrian, bicyclist who was a telegraph mes-

defendant ordinarily has the burden of establishing an affirmative defense asserted by him.⁷⁷ Where it is claimed that under the facts of the case a judgment in favor of the servant is a bar to recovery against the master, the burden of proof is on the one asserting the claim.⁷⁸ A master claiming that he is not liable because he was merely acting as agent for others has the burden of so proving.⁷⁹ A general master, who seeks to avoid liability for the negligence of his servants on the ground that they were pro hac vice servants of another, has the burden of establishing the new relation;⁸⁰ and in this connection the burden has been held to be on him to show not only that he loaned the servant,⁸¹ but also that he surrendered control and direction over the servant to the borrower.⁸²

Liability for acts of independent contractor or his servants If it is sought to charge the employer with liability for injuries sustained during performance of work by an alleged employee, and defendant claims that he is not liable because the work was being done by an independent contractor, the burden is on him to prove such relationship,⁸³ especially where a prima facie case to show the relation of master and servant is made out,⁸⁴ or where the facts recited are as consistent with the theory of the relationship of master and servant as with that of independent contractor.⁸⁵ If the facts are such as to exempt the owner of the property improved, or the person for whom the work is being performed, from liability for the acts of those performing such work, it devolves on the person claiming such exemption to make proof of the terms of the contract, showing that the relation of master and servant did not exist.⁸⁶ On the other hand, if it appears that the work was in fact done by an independent contractor, the burden is on plaintiff to show facts bringing the case within an exception to the general rule exempting the employer for liability resulting from work so

c. Admissibility

- (1) In general
- (2) Existence of relation of master and servant
- (3) Scope of employment
- (4) Negligence of servant

(1) In General

The admissibility of evidence in actions by a third person against an employer for injuries caused by a servant or independent contractor is governed by the general rules as to the admissibility of evidence in civil actions.

General rules apply in respect of the admissibility of evidence in actions against a master to recover for injuries inflicted by the acts or omissions of his servants,⁸⁹ or of a contractor engaged to do work for him.⁹⁰ Where the liability of the master is based on his alleged negligence in selecting an incompetent servant, evidence of the habits of the servant is admissible to show that he was not a suitable person to be employed, and that the master, by reasonable diligence, might have discovered what his habits were,⁹¹ and a like rule applies where the relation is that of contractor and contractee, instead of master and servant.⁹² So, evidence of the servant's habit of doing the act resulting in the injury is admissible to show that the master knew of and permitted the act, or in the use of ordinary care should have known of it.⁹³

Ratification as basis for punitive damages Circumstantial evidence tending to prove ratification of an employee's wrongful act, so as to charge defendant with liability for punitive damages, is admissible.⁹⁴ Thus, ratification of agent's wrongful and oppressive conduct by the principal may be shown by the fact that the servant is continued in the employment of the principal after notice of the commission of the willful wrong, on the question of allowing punitive damages.⁹⁵

(2) Existence of Relation of Master and Servant

Competent evidence is admissible in an action against the master on the issue whether the person committing the tortious act was or was not a servant or an independent contractor.

Any competent evidence tending to prove the relation of master and servant is admissible.⁹⁶ Testimony of an employee that he was employed by the

Admissibility of evidence on issue of party sought to be charged is competent to establish the fact of employment.⁹⁷ On the other hand, extrajudicial declarations or statements of an employee, standing alone, ordinarily are not admissible to establish the status of such person as an employee,⁹⁸ although, where there is other evidence sufficient to show such employment prima facie, such declarations or statements are admissible in corroboration,⁹⁹ especially when they constitute a part of the res gestæ and were made at the time of, and in connection with, the transaction in question.¹

In order to show the relationship of master and servant, evidence of the giving of orders by the former to the latter,² or evidence that the master's name was on the wagon which the servant was driving,³ that the uniform and tools of the alleged servant were visibly marked with defendant's name,⁴ or that business cards of defendant were found in the vehicle⁵ has been held admissible. Where the servant of one master is loaned to another master, evidence is admissible to show which one was his employer;⁶ and in this connection the fact that the general employer is in the business of renting machines and men is relevant, since in such case there is more likely to be an intent to retain control over the instrumentality.⁷ Immaterial evidence on the question whether the person committing the tortious act was the employee of the person sought to be charged is properly excluded.⁸

Independent contractor or servant. Any legal evidence is admissible to show that the alleged servant was or was not an independent contractor, or the servant of an independent contractor.⁹ In this connection, the contract between the parties is not conclusive on a third person suing for injuries.¹⁰ Thus, notwithstanding the existence of a written contract between the employer and the party engaged to do the work, evidence may be admitted to show the dealings and course of business of the parties,¹¹ and the authority or control exercised by the party sought to be charged.¹² It has been held proper to introduce in evidence a liability insurance policy, in determining the status of the offending person as an employee or an independent contractor.¹³

Where the servant is also a police officer, evidence of such fact is admissible, it being material to show in what capacity he was acting at the time of the injury,¹⁴ and, on an issue whether a person committing an assault on plaintiff was acting as a police officer or as a servant of defendant, evidence tending to show the extent of authority exercised by defendant, in and about the village in which its plant was located, is admissible.¹⁵

(3) Scope of Employment

Competent evidence is admissible to prove or disprove the fact that the servant committing the tortious act was acting within the scope of his employment at the time.

Any evidence having a legitimate tendency to prove or disprove the fact that the servant was acting within the scope of his employment at the time of the injury complained of is admissible.¹⁶ It is competent to show what acts were customarily performed by defendant's servant.¹⁷ Evidence of previous acts of the servant reasonably related in point of time to the act complained of is admissible.¹⁸ The fact that a servant has returned to his line of travel, after having deviated therefrom, is a circumstance which may be considered with other facts involved, in ascertaining whether the servant is acting in his employer's business.¹⁹ Evidence of orders given by the master may be admitted,²⁰ and also evidence of a custom to disregard them for the purpose of showing that the orders had been waived by the master.²¹ Evidence of instructions or directions given by defendant's employee is inadmissible to charge defendant with liability where it does not appear that the employee had authority to give such instructions or directions,²² or that defendant authorized or ratified them.²³

(4) Negligence of Servant

General rules of evidence have been applied in determining the admissibility of evidence, in an action by a third person against the master, to show negligence of the servant.

In an action by a third person against an employer based on the negligence of his servant, general rules prevail in determining the admissibility of evidence as to the negligence of the servant.²⁴ Evidence is inadmissible on behalf of the master to show that he properly instructed the servant as to the use of the property,²⁵ or that instructions were given the servant to be cautious.³⁶ Where liability is predicated on negligence of the servant, evidence is not admissible to establish that the servant was ordinarily a sober, careful, or skillful man,³⁷ since no amount of skill could exonerate him from the charge of negligence,³⁸ or prove that he was not negligent on the occasion when the injury complained of occurred,³⁹ and, conversely, in order to show negligence on the part of the servant, evidence of his general incompetency is inadmissible,³⁰ but evidence that the servant was intoxicated at the time of the accident is admissible.³¹

24. Evidence held inadmissible

Evidence that defendant ordered an animal, injured through the negligence of his servant, to be shot, and that he expected to pay plaintiff its value, is not admissible where liability is not predicated on the fact that defendant ordered the animal shot, but rather on the prior negligence of the servant causing the injury to the animal—Nulsen v Priemeyer, 30 Mo App 128

It has been held that evidence of the discharge of the servant after the act complained of is not admissible as being an implied admission by the employer of the servant's negligence or incompetence,³² but there is authority to the contrary.³³ It has been held that, where the negligence charged is a violation of the rules of the master, a book containing such rules is admissible,³⁴ but as to this there is also authority to the contrary.³⁵ Where punitive damages are not recoverable, and defendant admits the negligence, evidence of the circumstances of the injury and of gross negligence is inadmissible.³⁶

An ordinance limiting the rate of speed of a vehicle has been held admissible in an action against owners for a tort of their driver;³⁷ but an ordinance requiring the maintenance of prescribed barriers is inadmissible where the absence of barriers was not a proximate cause of the injury.³⁸

d. Weight and Sufficiency

- (1) In general
- (2) Particular applications

(1) In General

The general rules governing the weight and sufficiency of evidence in civil actions have been applied in actions by a third person against an employer for injuries caused by a servant or independent contractor.

General rules in respect of the weight and sufficiency of evidence apply in actions to recover from a master for injuries inflicted by his servant, or against an employer for the acts of independent contractors or their servants causing injury.³⁹ A preponderance of the evidence is necessary⁴⁰ and sufficient,⁴¹ and, even in an action against a master for damages for a willful homicide committed by his servant, no element of the case need be established with such certainty as to leave no reasonable doubt in the minds of the jury.⁴²

Prima facie showing. The evidence may be sufficient to make a prima facie showing of the existence or nonexistence of a material fact.⁴³ The relation of master and servant is prima facie established where it is shown that the alleged servant was performing labor for defendant at the time of the injury,⁴⁴ or that he was in possession of property of the owner and using it in his service at the time of the injury,⁴⁵ or, as sometimes said, that he was performing services peculiar to defendant's business or affairs on or about the latter's property.⁴⁶ On the question whether the person causing the injury was a servant or an independent contractor, evidence that defendant controlled the manner and means by which the work was done for his benefit shows, prima facie, that the relationship was that of master and servant.⁴⁷ Where it appears that it was necessary to have a person on the spot to act in an emergency, and to determine whether certain things should or should not be done, the fact that there was a person on the spot who was acting as though he had express authority is prima facie evidence that he had authority.⁴⁸

There is authority holding that proof of ownership of an instrumentality is not alone sufficient to make out a prima facie case that a person operating it was in the owner's employ for that purpose and, as such, was at a specific time acting within the scope of his authority,⁴⁹ and in order to establish a prima facie case in this connection it must be shown, in addition to such ownership, not only that the operator was an employee of the owner but that he was employed generally in the business of his employer to operate such instrumentality.⁵⁰ However, it is very generally held that proof of ownership of a vehicle is prima facie evidence that the driver who caused the damage by its negligent operation was the servant of the owner and using the vehicle in the owner's business at the time the injury occurred,⁵¹ although other circumstances surrounding the injury may overcome this prima facie showing.⁵² If the same testimony which proves the relationship of master and servant also proves that, at the time of the act for which it is claimed the master was liable, the servant was not acting within the scope and in the course of his employment, the prima facie case made by plaintiff is rebutted, and it becomes unnecessary for defendant to negate his liability as master, inasmuch as plaintiff has done so himself.⁵³

(2) Particular Applications

In actions by a third person against a master to recover for injuries sustained through the tortious acts of a servant or independent contractor, the sufficiency of the evidence has been adjudicated with respect to a great many matters, such as the existence of the relationship of master and servant or of employer and independent contractor, and the scope of a servant's employment.

In the notes will be found cases in which it was held that the evidence was sufficient to sustain a verdict or judgment for plaintiff⁵⁴ or was sufficient

tributary negligence, or to show other matters⁸¹

Independent contractors. While the facts of the case should be carefully examined where the defense is that the operations out of which the injury arose were conducted by an independent contractor,⁸² nevertheless something more than speculation and conjecture is necessary to convert a bona fide contract independently performed into one of master and servant.⁸³ In determining whether the person causing the injury was a servant rather than an independent contractor, it has been held, where the instrumentality causing the injury was far from the employer, that the employer's right of control over such instrumentality should be implied only from reasonably clear evidence showing it⁸⁴

In particular cases it has been held that the evidence was sufficient to show the existence of the relation of employer and independent contractor,⁸⁵ that the acts complained of were committed by servants of an independent contractor,⁸⁶ or that the injury was caused by the negligence of an independent contractor or his servants for which negligence defendant was not responsible,⁸⁷ also, that the relationship of employer and independent contractor did not exist,⁸⁸ that the offending person was a servant of defendant, rather than an independent contractor,⁸⁹ or that the offending person was an employee of defendant rather than an employee of an independent contractor.⁹⁰ Also the evidence has been held sufficient to show the inherently dangerous character of the work on which the contractor was engaged,⁹¹ the employer's knowledge that work delegated to an independent contractor was being done in a way from which danger to the public was reasonably foreseeable,⁹² the principal contractor's knowledge of the unsafe condition of appliances furnished,⁹³ interference by the employer in the methods of work being done by his contractor,⁹⁴ or negligence of the employer in failing to provide a reasonably safe place for work for the employees of the contractor.⁹⁵

In other cases the evidence has been held insufficient to show the existence of the relation of employer and independent contractor,⁹⁶ that the offending person was a servant of defendant, rather than an independent contractor,⁹⁷ that the employer had

Salesman

Evidence that defendant's advance salesman could obtain orders only from persons residing in territory assigned to him, that orders had to comply with designated requirements, and that defendant reserved right to refuse to make deliveries or pay commissions, and to cancel or-

notice that the contractor was doing an unlawful act,⁹⁸ that an owner had knowledge of a contractor's contemplated method of procedure,⁹⁹ an assumption of duty to furnish appliances for servants of an independent contractor,¹ want of due care in selecting an independent contractor,² or such interference with the work as would destroy the relationship of independent contractor and create that of master and servant.³

Relationship of master and servant In order to hold a master liable for a tort committed by an alleged servant, the evidence must be sufficient to show that the relationship of master and servant existed between the wrongdoer and the party sought to be held as master⁴ and that such relationship existed at the time of the commission of the tort⁵ The relationship of master and servant may be proved by circumstantial evidence.⁶ In particular cases it has been held that the evidence was sufficient⁷ or insufficient⁸ to show that the relation of master and servant existed, or sufficient to show that the offending person was not an employee of defendant;⁹ and, in cases in which the servant of one master was lent to another, the evidence has been held sufficient to justify a finding that the servant remained under the control of his original master,¹⁰ or sufficient to show that the offending person was a servant of the master to whom he had been lent¹¹

In action against carnival manager for assault on plaintiff by employee of boxing and wrestling show affiliated with carnival, evidence that manager had no control over show or of hiring or discharge of employees thereof and that employee in assaulting plaintiff was not acting under instructions from defendant sustained finding that perpetrator of assault was not employee of defendant, precluding plaintiff's recovery.—Free v Tidwell, Tex Civ.App., 84 S.W.2d 512.

Scope or course of employment Where it is sought to hold a master responsible for the torts committed by his alleged servant, there must be sufficient competent evidence to show that the tortious act complained of was committed in the course of the servant's employment or in the furtherance of the master's business¹² If the act complained of is done in the course of the ordinary work of the servant and is within the ostensible authority of one performing such work, the burden of showing that the servant was acting on behalf and by the authority of defendant is sustained by showing what was done¹³ Proof that the tortious act was committed by the servant in the course of his employment may be made by circumstantial evidence,¹⁴ and the master's consent, express or implied, to the act of a servant may be established by the verbal testimony of witnesses, or by surrounding circumstances, or both¹⁵ It has been held that if it clearly appears that a detective in defendant's employ shot the injured person, slight evidence of the extent of his authority and of the use of unnecessary force would suffice to put defendant to its defense¹⁶

The acts and declarations of a servant have been held not sufficient of themselves to establish the fact that certain acts of the servant were within the scope of his employment;¹⁷ and the wanton and malicious quality of an act done by a servant ordinarily is strong evidence against an intention on his part to further his master's employment¹⁸ The use of property for another, producing the harm complained of, does not of itself prove authority to perform the act causing damage.¹⁹

In particular cases it has been held that the evidence was sufficient to show the servant was²⁰ or

Protection of contents of building

In action for injuries sustained when struck by stone thrown by employee in attempting to eject boy from employers' premises, evidence sustained finding that act of employee was committed in course of his employment so as to render master liable where it was shown that

§ 616. Trial and Judgment

a In general

b Dismissal, nonsuit, or directed verdict

a. In General

In actions to charge an employer for acts of his servants or of contractors employed by him the general rules governing the trial of civil actions ordinarily apply.

General rules governing the trial of civil actions ordinarily apply in actions to charge an employer for acts of his servants or of contractors employed by him.²³

Where a master's liability in an action against him and a fellow servant is based in part on the master's negligence in constructing defective appliances, the fact that the verdict is in favor of the fellow servant is not a ground for new trial as to the master²⁴ Where an action for injuries to a servant was originally instituted against the master and a fellow servant, and a verdict rendered in favor of the fellow servant, he may properly be eliminated as a party on a new trial²⁵

b. Dismissal, Nonsuit, or Directed Verdict

Where there is a conflict in the evidence as to material issues or different inferences may be drawn from the evidence, a nonsuit, directed verdict, or demurrer to the evidence should not be granted.

Under the general rules considered in the C.J.S. title Trial § 225 et seq, also 64 C.J. p 371 note 2 et seq, if there is any evidence tending to prove the cause of action from which different inferences may be drawn, or if there is a conflict in the evidence as to material issues, a nonsuit, directed verdict, or demurrer to the evidence should not be granted.²⁶ On

Collection of money due

Where evidence showed that quarrel between plaintiff and employee was precipitated by employee's efforts to collect for drinks which had been served to customers and that both argument over bill and encounter occurred in course of employee's unfinished effort to induce plaintiff to pay for drinks, trial judge properly held that assault was committed as part of business which employee was authorized to transact for owner and that therefore owner was liable to plaintiff—Andrews v Seidner, 121 P 2d 863, 49 Cal App 2d 427

(1) In General

Where the evidence is in conflict or more than one inference can be drawn therefrom, the liability of the master for injury caused by his servant is to be determined by the jury.

General rules relating to questions of law and fact in civil actions ordinarily are applicable in actions against a master for injuries resulting from the tortious acts of his servants.³¹ Accordingly, questions of fact are for the jury and questions of law are for the court.³² Where the facts present no conflict and furnish the basis for but a single inference and that favorable to the master, his freedom from liability is to be determined by the court as a question of law.³³ On the other hand, where there is a conflict in the evidence, or more than one inference can be drawn from it, the liability of the master is to be determined by the jury.³⁴

one inference can be drawn therefrom, it is for the jury to determine whether the instrumentality which caused the injury was a dangerous instrumentality, within the rule holding the master liable for injuries caused by his servant in the use thereof,³⁵ whether the master knew or ought to have known of the carelessness or incompetency of the servant, and whether he might have known by the exercise of diligence,³⁶ whether the employer or contractor had control of the building operations,³⁷ the cause of the injury,³⁸ the ownership of the instrumentality causing the injury,³⁹ the incompetency of the servant,⁴⁰ ratification by the master of the servant's act;⁴¹ and the amount of damages suffered.⁴²

Joint liability of master and servant. In an action against the employer and his servant where there is no testimony on which the servant can be held liable and there is no liability asserted except that growing out of the doctrine of respondeat superior, the liability of the master as a matter of fact and of law is for the court.⁴³

(2) Relationship of Master and Servant

The question whether the relationship of master and servant existed at the time of the injury is one of fact for the jury where the evidence is conflicting or more than one inference can be drawn from the evidence.

The question whether the relationship of master and servant existed at the time of the injury complained of is one of mixed law and fact.⁴⁴ Where the evidence is conflicting or more than one inference can be drawn from the evidence, it is a question of fact for the jury, or the judge sitting without a jury, to determine whether the relationship of master and servant existed at the time of the injury complained of.⁴⁵

Ariz—Lee Moor Contracting Co. v. Blanton, 65 P.2d 85, 49 Ariz 130.

Where it is not entirely clear who was the controlling master of the borrowed or hired employee, and different inferences in that respect can fairly be drawn from the evidence, it is for the jury, and not the court, to determine the question.⁴⁹ Where the pertinent facts pertaining to the contract and relationship of the persons involved are not in dispute, and but one reasonable inference can be drawn therefrom, it is a question of law for the court.⁵⁰

(3) Scope of Employment

The question whether a servant was acting within the scope of his employment at the time of the injury complained of ordinarily is one of fact.

The question whether a servant was acting within the scope of his employment at the time of the injury complained of may be a question of fact or of law.⁵¹ Where the evidence is conflicting or more than one inference can be drawn therefrom, it is for the jury to determine, under appropriate instructions from the court, whether the servant was acting within the scope of his employment at the time of the injury complained of.⁵² Whether the presumption raised by the evidence that the servant was acting question⁵³ Where it is doubtful whether a servant in injuring a third person was acting within the scope of his authority, the doubt will be resolved against the master, as considered supra § 570, at least to the extent of requiring the question to be submitted to the jury for determination⁵⁴

On the other hand, where there is no dispute as to the facts and they are susceptible of but one inference, the question is one of law and should not be submitted to the jury.⁵⁵ Where reasonable men could not conclude from the evidence that a servant was acting within the course of his employment, the court must hold as a matter of law that he was not so acting⁵⁶

Servant as special officer

(1) Where official or private capacity of police officer clearly appears, there is no question for jury—Neall v. Hutchinson Amusement Co., 139 A. 671, 126 Me. 469, 55 A.L.R. 1191

(2) Whether officer was acting within scope of his employment as a corporation's servant or in his capacity as a public officer is a question of law where the conclusion that the officer was acting as servant of the corporation cannot be reasonably supported—Krowka v. Colt Patent Fire Arm Mfg. Co., 8 A.2d 5, 125 Conn. 705.

58. Ill.—Boehmer v. Norton, 65 N.E.2d 212, 328 Ill. App. 17.

Deviation from course of employment. Whether there has been a deviation so material or substantial as to constitute a complete departure is usually a question of fact,⁵⁷ but where the conclusion to be drawn from the nature and extent of the deviation is not doubtful, the question is one of law and not of fact⁵⁸

Where deviation from the course of his employment by the servant is slight and not unusual, the court may, as a matter of law, find that the servant was still executing his master's business⁵⁹ On the other hand, if the deviation is very marked and unusual the court may determine that the servant was not on the master's business at all but on his own⁶⁰ Cases falling between these extremes will be regarded as involving a question of fact for the determination of the jury;⁶¹ where the deviation is uncertain in extent and degree, or where the surrounding facts and circumstances leave room for legitimate inferences as to whether or not, notwithstanding the deviation, the servant may still be engaged in the master's business within the scope of his general employment, the question is for the jury.⁶²

(4) Negligence and Contributory Negligence

The negligence of the servant and the contributory negligence of the plaintiff are questions for the jury where the facts are in dispute or more than one inference can be drawn therefrom

Where the facts are in dispute, or more than one inference can be drawn therefrom, the question of the employee's negligence is for the jury,⁶³ as is the

Mo—Manus v Kansas City Distributing Corporation, 74 SW 2d 506, 228 Mo App 905

Ohio—Post Pub. Co v Schickling, 154 NE 751, 22 Ohio App 318, affirmed Schickling v Post Pub. Co., 155 NE 143, 115 Ohio St 589.

written contract, the parties may so construe it by their acts and conduct as to deprive the contractor of the right to do the work according to his own methods and to make the final results of the work in the methods employed depend on the directions of the contractee, and in such case the question whether the status of the contractor is that of an independent contractor becomes a question for the jury.⁷⁴ Where the written contract is ambiguous the relationship is for the jury.⁷⁵ Where the contract of employment is in writing and oral evidence is introduced with reference to the practice under it, and but one inference can be drawn from the evidence, the question whether an employer and independent contractor relationship exists is for the court.⁷⁶

b. Liability of Employer for Injuries to Independent Contractor or Servants

The question whether an employer has been guilty of such negligence as to render him liable for an injury to an independent contractor or servant thereof is for the jury where the facts are in dispute or more than one inference can be drawn therefrom.

Where the facts are in dispute or more than one inference can be drawn from them, it is a question for the jury whether an employer has been guilty of such negligence as to render him liable for an injury to the servant of an independent contractor.⁷⁷ It is for the jury on conflicting evidence to determine whether the employer reserved the right to direct the performance of the work so as to be liable for injuries to a servant of the independent contractor.⁷⁸ Likewise, where the evidence is in conflict or more than one inference can be drawn therefrom, it is for the jury to determine whether the servant of the independent contractor has been guilty of contributory negligence.⁷⁹

80. Assumption of risk

(1) Since no contractual relation exists between the employer and servant of an independent contractor, defense of assumption of risk was properly withdrawn in action against employer for injuries to employee of independent contractor.—Harvey v Chas. R. McCormick Lumber Co of Delaware, 271 P. 65, 149 Wash 368

Injuries to independent contractor. Where the evidence is conflicting or more than one inference may be drawn therefrom, the question whether the employer has been guilty of such negligence as to render him liable for an injury to an independent contractor is one of fact.⁸¹

c. Liability of Employer for Acts of Contractor or His Servants

The liability of a contractee for the acts of his contractor or servants is a question for the jury where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences may be drawn therefrom.

Where there is conflicting evidence, or different inferences may be drawn, the liability of the contractee for the acts of his contractor or the contractor's servants is a question for the jury.⁸²

d. Liability of Other Persons

Where the evidence is in conflict or different inferences may be drawn, it is for the jury to determine the personal liability of a servant to a third person or fellow servant and the liability of a contractor for injuries suffered by a servant of a subcontractor.

Where the evidence is conflicting or different inferences may be drawn, the liability of a servant to a third person⁸³ or to a fellow servant⁸⁴ is a question of fact for the jury.

Liability of contractors. Where the evidence is in conflict or more than one inference may be drawn from the facts, the question whether the contractor is liable for an injury suffered by a subcontractor's employee is for the jury,⁸⁵ but where the evidence is undisputed and but one inference may be drawn therefrom the question of the contractor's liability is for the court.⁸⁶ Where a contractor delegates to an independent subcontractor the performance of the contract, in an action by the contractee against the contractor for damages resulting from the failure to use due care in the performance of the contract the question of the cause of the damage is properly submitted to the jury where there is evidence tending to prove that it was due to the negligence of the contractor, to the negligence of the contractee, or to the negligence of both.⁸⁷

In actions against a master to recover for injuries resulting from the acts of his servants or from the acts of an independent contractor or his servants, the general rules relating to instructions in civil actions ordinarily apply.

General rules relating to instructions in civil actions, as considered in the C.J.S. title Trial §§ 266-448, also 64 C.J. p 510 note 3 et seq, ordinarily apply in actions against a master to recover for injuries resulting from the acts of his servants or from the acts of an independent contractor or his servants.⁸⁸ The instructions should contain a cor-

In customer's action against operator of beauty shop for burns allegedly received from permanent wave machine, aside from instruction with respect to measure of damages, an instruction based on exercise of ordinary care on part of operator or owner in giving treatment is all that is necessary, and "ordinary care" should be defined as that degree of care usually exercised by persons of ordinary skill, ability and prudence engaged in business of giving permanent wave treatments—Hogan v Hornbeck, 138 SW 2d 1032, 382 Ky 574

ble to the facts of the case, and not merely lay down the general principles applicable to the case and leave the jury to apply them.⁹²

The instructions must not be misleading.⁹³ Instructions are erroneous which are not supported by the facts in evidence,⁹⁴ which improperly assume the existence of facts not proved,⁹⁵ which submit questions of law to the jury,⁹⁶ or which invade the province of the jury.⁹⁷ If the court assumes to give a binding instruction on certain enumerated facts, the instruction must recite all the facts on which liability depends.⁹⁸

The instructions are to be construed as a whole, and the fact that one portion considered separately might be open to contradiction does not constitute error if the charge is correct in its entirety.⁹⁹

Requests for instructions. Under the general

§ 619. — Verdict, Findings, and Judgment

a. In general

b Verdict against master only

a. In General

The general rules controlling verdicts, findings, and judgments in civil actions ordinarily apply in actions to charge an employer for acts of his servants or of contractors employed by him.

General rules governing verdicts, findings, and judgments in civil actions ordinarily are applicable to verdict and findings¹⁵ and to judgments¹⁶ in actions to charge an employer for acts of his servants or of contractors employed by him

Exoneration of master as releasing servant.

Where the alleged negligence of the servant causes injury and there is no independent negligence on the part of the master, a verdict exonerating the master also absolves the servant¹⁷ A judgment favorable to the master does not in all cases exonerate the servant, the court may have found that the relation of master and servant did not exist, and that the master did not actively participate in the wrongful act, as well as because, it may be, that no trespass was committed¹⁸ A verdict exonerating the employer because the statute of limitations has run does not absolve the servant against whom the statute has not run.¹⁹

b. Verdict against Master Only

Where a master and servant are sued jointly in an action based solely on the servant's tortious conduct and the servant is acquitted, as a general rule there can be no recovery against the master.

While the rule is otherwise in some jurisdictions,²⁰ as a general rule, where a master and servant are sued jointly in an action based solely on the tortious conduct of the servant, and the servant is acquitted, there can be no recovery against the master²¹ Under such circumstances, a verdict against the master and an acquittal of the servant is equivalent to a finding that no cause of action exists and will not support a judgment against the master,²³ in such case the verdict is self-contradictory and inconsistent.²³ Such a verdict should be set aside²¹ or judgment for the master entered notwithstanding the verdict,²⁵ but it has also been held that in such case no judgment predicated on the verdict should be entered for or against plaintiff, as to either the master or the servant, but that on motion of either plaintiff or defendant master the court should set aside the whole verdict, the expressed or implied finding for the servant as well as the finding against the master.²⁶

The rule absolving the master from liability on exoneration of the servant is not confined to negligence cases, but applies with equal force to other torts,²⁷ such as assault and battery,²⁸ false imprisonment,²⁹ and fraud and deceit.³⁰ It is also ap-

(1) Where master's liability is predicated on negligence or other tort of servant under doctrine of respondeat superior, a finding or verdict that servant was not guilty conclusively establishes nonliability of master—Chesapeake & O. plicable whether the master is a corporation or an individual³¹

Where a master and servant are sued jointly, a verdict against the master only is in effect a verdict for the servant,³² and the rule exonerating the master on the acquittal of the servant generally applies.³³ However, in a number of decisions it has been held that the failure of the jury to return a verdict against the servant is no ground for setting aside a judgment on a verdict rendered against the master³⁴

Extent and limits of rule The rule that on acquittal of the servant the master is exonerated from liability has no application except in cases where the liability of the master is based solely on the wrongful acts of the servant, who is acquitted.³⁵ If the liability is not so based, a finding that the act of the particular servant was not wrongful does not prevent the rendition of a verdict against the master based on the acts of other servants shown to be wrongful and for which the master is liable under the doctrine of respondeat superior³⁶ In addition, a verdict against the master and an acquittal of the servant will be sufficient to sustain a judgment against the master where the act resulting in the injury complained of was committed under the express command of the master,³⁷ or where the master and servant are sued jointly for injuries resulting from the negligence of both and there is evidence of negligence on the part of the master distinct from the alleged negligent act of the servant³⁸

In the foregoing circumstances a verdict of acquittal of the servant is not inconsistent with a verdict holding the master liable and does not vitiate it.³⁹

Under comparative negligence rule, where, in an action for negligence against a corporation and certain of its employees, there is a plea of contributory negligence on the part of defendant and evidence tending to establish it, the jury may, if the evidence justifies it under the comparative negligence rule, find in favor of such employees and against the corporation.⁴⁰

Action by servant against master and coservant. There is a conflict of authority as to the legal effect of the verdict where in an action by a servant against his master and a coservant there is a verdict against the master and either a verdict for or no finding against the coemployee.⁴¹ On the one hand, it has been held that such a verdict constitutes a mistrial⁴² or that it requires a judgment in favor of the master.⁴³ On the other hand, it has been held that such a verdict is sufficient to sustain a judgment for the servant.⁴⁴

§ 620. Appeal and Error

The review by appeal and error of judgments in actions against a master for the acts of his servants or of contractors employed by him is considered in Appeal and Error § 1 et seq.

§ 621. Costs

Costs in civil actions are considered in Costs § 1 et seq.

VI. LIABILITY OF THIRD PERSON FOR INJURIES TO SERVANT

§ 622. Rights of Master

A master has been held to be entitled to maintain an action for injuries to his servants because of the negligent or willful acts of third persons which result in damage to the master through loss of services, although it has also been held that such a recovery will be denied unless the injury to the employee is intentionally calculated to harm the employer in his contractual obligations.

Under the common law it has been held that a master may maintain an action for all injuries to his servants because of the negligent or willful acts of third persons which result in damage to the master through loss of services.⁴⁵ However, this right of the master, it has been held, is an old remedy at common law when the basis of society was that of "status" and the servant was looked on as a member of the master's family,⁴⁶ and, since the master-servant relationship is now⁴⁷ generally based on contract, the master's cause of action for loss of his employee's services remains as an anomaly in the law,⁴⁸ and has been held to be of doubtful right under modern conditions.⁴⁹ The right of action is for the actual losses suffered from the inability of the servant to serve his master,⁵⁰ and the master has no right of action unless some loss of service or capacity to serve results from the injury.⁵¹ It has been held that the employer's right of recovery does not include damages for wages and expenses paid by him during the servant's incapacity,⁵² but it has also been held that, where an employer was required by contract to pay a seaman maintenance and cure, such employer can recover from a third person negligently causing the seaman's injury not only for loss of services, but also for any sums expended for maintenance and cure.⁵³

On the other hand, it has also been held that an employer has no right of action against a third person responsible for injuries to his employee,⁵⁴ except where expressly given such right by statute,⁵⁵ or where the injury to the employee is intentionally calculated to harm the employer in his contractual obligations.⁵⁶ Thus, it has been held that, where a servant is injured through the wrongful act of another, and the master suffers an indirect loss from some contract obligation to the injured servant, the loss is not actionable,⁵⁷ but there is also authority to the contrary.⁵⁸ It has likewise been held that a third person is not liable in damages to the master where the injury to the servant resulted from the mere omission to perform a contract duty owing to the servant.⁵⁹

Existence of master and servant relationship. Where the master has a right of action against a third person for injuries to his servant, the relationship of master and servant must be established to permit a recovery.⁶⁰ In this connection it has been held that the relationship of master and servant does not exist between the United States and a member of the military services,⁶¹ or between a state and a national guardsman,⁶² or between a municipality and a volunteer fireman,⁶³ but, under a statute forbidding any injury to a servant which affects his ability to serve his master, an actress has been held to be a servant.⁶⁴

If the servant dies shortly after the infliction of the injury, the right of the master to recover is limited to the loss of services sustained between the time of the accident and the death of the servant.⁶⁵ Where the servant dies immediately on sustaining the injury, the master has no right of action unless by virtue of some special statutory provision.⁶⁶

Procedure In an action against a third person for damages resulting from injuries to a servant, general rules of procedure apply with respect to the pleadings,⁶⁷ burden of proof,⁶⁸ and the weight and sufficiency of evidence.⁶⁹

§ 623. Rights of Servant

An injured employee has the right to maintain an action against any negligent tort-feasor responsible for his injury.

An injured employee has the right to maintain an action against any negligent tort-feasor responsible for his injuries,⁷⁰ unless such right is expressly or by necessary inference denied him by statute.⁷¹ Thus, the servant has a right of action for his personal injury, separate and apart from the master's action for loss of services.⁷²

VII. INTERFERENCE WITH THE RELATION BY THIRD PERSONS

A. CIVIL LIABILITY

§ 624. In General

Malicious interference with the advantageous relations between employer and employee, to the injury of either party, may subject the wrongdoer to an action for damages

It has been broadly held that malicious interference with the advantageous relations between employer and employee, to the injury of either party, may subject the wrongdoer to an action for damages,⁷³ since there is a property right in a contract of employment.⁷⁴ This rule has been held to apply to interference preventing the formation of employment contracts as well as to interference with existing contractual relations.⁷⁵ A third person may not maliciously destroy an employer's freedom of choice of the men he will hire and of the conditions of employment; nor may an outsider maliciously destroy the workers' freedom of choice whether they will accept and continue the employment offered them.⁷⁶

Generally, in order to render an act which interferes with another's employment a violation of his rights, there must be an intention to bring about a particular result, the use of unlawful means, and the absence of justification.⁷⁷ "Unlawful means," used in this connection, does not apply to means in themselves unlawful, but to those which are unlawful as being prima facie an invasion of plaintiff's rights.⁷⁸ The term "malice," as used in the rule

Generally, one who, knowing of the existence of the relation of master and servant between two parties, maliciously or willfully without just cause or excuse, entices the servant to quit his employment to the master's injury, is liable for the resulting damages.

While there is some authority to the contrary,⁸⁴ it is very generally held independently of statute that one who, knowing of the existence of the relation of master and servant between two parties, maliciously or willfully without just cause or excuse, entices the servant to quit his employment to the master's injury, is liable for the resulting damages,⁸⁵ since an employer has a property right in the contract of employment with his servant.⁸⁶ It has been held that the operation of the rule is not affected by the fact that the employment was not for a term but at the will of the parties,⁸⁷ or by the fact that there is no right of action against the person

Parent's advice to child

The rule has been held not to impose liability for advice given by a parent to an infant child to disaffirm a contract, since public policy dictates that parents should have an absolute right to advise their infant children with regard to all matters and that such right should be exercised freely and should not subject the parent to any inquiry as to motive—*Lee v. In New York

(1) It has been held that malicious attempts to induce employees to leave their employer are illegal, even if there is no contract for a definite term between them and their employer and the employment is who was induced or influenced to terminate his service or to refuse to perform his agreement.⁸⁸ Also, the rule may apply notwithstanding the servant was enticed to leave before the services had actually commenced,⁸⁹ or the injury inflicted was not for the benefit of the wrongdoer.⁹⁰

Ordinarily, the fact that one is engaged in a competing business and wishes to engage workmen therefor is not a legal excuse for enticing away employees of another,⁹¹ and a competitor who selfishly, intentionally, and without justification induces the breach of a contract for a definite, unexpired period may be liable in damages to the employer.⁹² It has been held, however, that, where an employee is free to leave his employment and in so doing violates no contract, the employer has no such vested interest in the continuity of his services as to warrant recovery of damages from a rival, who, in the legitimate interest of its business and by fair means, induces the employee to leave his present employment and enter its own,⁹³ in the absence of some monopolistic purpose,⁹⁴ although the immunity against liability is not retained if unfair methods are used in interfering with the employment relation.⁹⁵

or where the servant has rightfully terminated the contract which is for any reason invalid.⁹⁸ Also, a person making a contract with a servant of another, to take effect at the expiration of his term of service, is not liable.⁹⁹

Employees, it has been held, must not entice other employees to leave during their terms of employment,¹ but they may negotiate between themselves looking to their future betterment after the expiration of their existing contracts of employment,² and no action lies against an employee for hiring other employees after the expiration of their contracts and the severance of their employment.³

b. Relation of Master and Servant

In order to maintain an action for enticing away a servant, there must be a contract to hire with the party complaining, entered into by the servant himself or by some other person having authority to bind him to the service.

In order to maintain an action for enticing away a servant, there must be a contract to hire with the party complaining, entered into by the servant himself or by some other person having authority to bind him to the service.⁴ The relation need not be created by a written contract in order to constitute one a servant, so that a third person will be liable to the master for enticing him away,⁵ unless, as discussed infra § 626, it is otherwise provided by

terminable at will—American League Baseball Club of N Y v Pasquel, 63 N.Y.S.2d 537, 187 Misc 230

(2) It has also been held, however, that it is not illegal to induce employee to break contract of employment, where employment is not for express definite term, because, if employee has agreed to work for another but for no fixed period, either may end contract whenever he chooses—Vail-Ballou Press v Casey, 212 N.Y.S. 118, 126 Misc 689

statute. It is not essential that the contract should have been made in the presence of witnesses.⁶

Liability for enticing away an employee may exist notwithstanding the contract of employment would be unenforceable in an action between the parties thereto.⁷ So, while there is some authority to the contrary,⁸ it has been held that, if the servant is actually performing services under the contract, the master may maintain an action for damages against a third person who interferes and entices the servant to leave his employment, although the contract is voidable at the option of the servant,⁹ as for failure to comply with the requirements of the statute of frauds,¹⁰ or by reason of the infancy of the servant.¹¹ Furthermore, the terms of the employment need not bind the servant to give his exclusive personal services to the master for the whole time agreed on.¹²

The rule imposing liability for enticing away servants applies to all cases in which the relation of service exists and is not confined to contracts for menial service.¹³ It has been held that a cropper is a servant, within the rule as to enticing away,¹⁴ but there is also authority to the contrary.¹⁵

c. Intent; Malice; Absence of Just Cause or Excuse

In order to sustain an action for unlawfully enticing away a servant, it must be shown that the defendant had notice of the relation of master and servant, and that he intentionally, willfully, or maliciously interfered with the relation, without right or justification.

In order to sustain an action for unlawfully enticing away a servant, it is essential that defendant had notice of the existence of the relation of master and servant between plaintiff and his servant¹⁶ and that he intentionally,¹⁷ willfully,¹⁸ or maliciously¹⁹ interfered with that relation, without right or justifiable cause.²⁰ Malice in inducing an employee to break his contract of employment is established, if it is shown that defendant acted intentionally without just cause or excuse,²¹ and it is not essential that there should be malice in the sense of personal ill will.²²

What constitutes just cause or excuse. The justification, in order to be sufficient to exempt one from liability for procuring the breach of another's contract, must be an equal or superior right in the party justifying.²³ It has been held that, where there is a bona fide controversy over conditions and terms of employment,²⁴ peaceful labor tactics may be employed to persuade employees to cease work, although such tactics may have the effect of inducing breaches of contract between employer and employee.²⁵ A third person has been held to have the right, at the proper time and in a proper manner, to point out to employees that their contracts, whether legal or illegal, were unwise, and that the employees should therefore exercise their privilege to withdraw from the employment,²⁶ but it has also been held that a third person has no right to go on the property of another to persuade persons working there to break their contracts of employment.²⁷

§ 626. — Under Special Statutory Provisions

- a. In general
- b. Hiring before commencement of work or after abandonment of contract

a. In General

Special statutes have been enacted in some jurisd.-

tions with the view of preventing interference with contract relations between master and servant.

A number of statutes have been enacted with the view of preventing interference with contract relations between master and servant,²⁸ and the validity of these statutes has been upheld as against various objections.²⁹ The purpose of these enactments is to incite and constrain laborers who are under engagements for a specified time to the performance of their contracts, by rendering it difficult for them to secure employment elsewhere during the term for which they have been engaged.³⁰ Statutes of this character must be strictly construed in favor of liberty of contract and of the person.³¹

Actual knowledge of the relation of master and servant by the one employing the servant is necessary to charge him with liability under some statutes.³² No liability attaches by reason of the fact that defendant might have known by diligence or reasonable inquiry that the servant was in the employ of another.³³ Under a statute forbidding one "knowingly to hire, contract with, decoy, or entice away," it has been held that a third person inducing a servant to become a partner with him is liable to the employer if, at the time he induced the servant to come with him, he knew that he was under

employment with another.³⁴

Written consent of employer Under some statutes, the written consent of the employer is required before a third person may knowingly hire his employee,³⁵ and an understanding by a third party that the former employer had released the employee is insufficient under such statutes to absolve the third person from liability.³⁶

Who are servants within statute. A cropper has been held to be a servant within the meaning of the statutes,³⁷ and, where the contract of employment to make a crop does not fix the exact date of expiration, it has been held that the time therefor is necessarily implied as that which is necessary to make and harvest the crop.³⁸ An actress, it has been held, is not within the meaning of a statute rendering liable for damages any person willfully enticing from employment "any person or persons who have contracted to labor for a fixed period of time."³⁹

Under some statutes, no liability attaches for the hiring of another's servant where the servant has not yet actually entered on the service provided for by the contract or if the employee abandoned his original employment prior to the hiring.

The question whether hiring before a servant has actually entered on the service provided for by the contract gives a cause of action depends on the wording of the statute.⁴⁰ No liability attaches under a statute fixing a penalty to be collected by civil actions for enticing one to "leave the service", of his employer, for inducing a servant to break his contract before actually entering into the service, and commencing work.⁴¹ However, it is otherwise where the statute makes it unlawful for any person to employ an employee of another or in any way disturb the relation of master and servant when such relation "shall have been created."⁴²

Under some statutes, if the employee has abandoned his original employment, a third person subsequently employing the servant is not liable in damages therefor,⁴³ at least where the servant left his employment for good and sufficient cause.⁴⁴ So, it has been held that one who knowingly employs a servant who has abandoned his service under a parol contract of hiring is not liable for damages under a statute making it unlawful to employ any person under contract with another, provided the contract is in writing.⁴⁵ Under a statute making liable in damages persons who willfully induce, knowingly employ, or entice away a laborer before the expiration of his contract to leave his employer, it has been held that no liability exists where a third person hires another believing in good faith that such employee has abandoned his original contract;⁴⁶ and, where one employs a person, without knowledge that he is the servant of another and has quit before the expiration of his term, discovers such facts before the termination of the period of the original employment, he is not liable, although he afterward refuses to discharge the servant.⁴⁷

It has been held, on the other hand, that the fact that the laborer had voluntarily broken the contract of service before being employed by defendant does not affect plaintiff's right to damages, under a statute which makes it unlawful to hire one who is "at the time under contract or in the employ of another."⁴⁸

§ 627. — Actions

An employer may maintain an action at law for damages against a third person unlawfully enticing his servant to leave his employment; such an action is for a tort, and not for a breach of implied contract, and the proper form thereof is trespass on the case.

been held that such remedy at law is not necessarily exclusive,⁵⁰ except where the third person has already accomplished the breach of the contract of employment.⁵¹ An action for enticing away a servant is for a tort, and not for a breach of an implied contract.⁵² It has been held that the proper form of action is trespass on the case,⁵³ and this remedy is available, notwithstanding the existence of a remedy by an action for the penalty, as provided for by statute,⁵⁴ where it is merely cumulative.⁵⁵

The right to sue may be lost by failure to notify the third person of the prior contract of hire,⁵⁶ or by a failure to comply with conditions precedent in the statute,⁵⁷ such as a prior conviction where by statute the act is made a criminal offense,⁵⁸ but, under some provisions, a prior conviction is not a condition precedent to the civil liability of one

sought to be held liable under the statute.⁵⁹

Procedure. In actions to recover for damages for wrongfully enticing away servants, the courts have applied the general rules applicable to pleadings,⁶⁰ burden of proof,⁶¹ issues, proof, and variance,⁶² admissibility,⁶³ and weight and sufficiency⁶⁴ of evidence, questions of law and fact,⁶⁵ and the giving of instructions.⁶⁶ assessed for the breach of plaintiff's contract with his employee.⁶⁸ If an entire loss of service during the balance of the term of employment is shown, the value of the services for all of such time is recoverable.⁶⁹ As in tort injuries generally, damages in actions of this nature are rarely ascertainable in any accurate sense, but are merely matters of reasonable proportions considering all of the circumstances of the case.⁷⁰ In a proper case exemplary damages may be awarded,⁷¹ and under some statutes double damages may be recovered.⁷²

§ 629. Intimidation, Coercion, or Violence to Prevent Service

Generally, the use of intimidation, coercion, or violence to prevent a servant from continuing in the employ of the master is an actionable wrong which imposes civil liability on the wrongdoer in favor of the master.

As a general rule, the use of intimidation, coercion, or violence to prevent a servant from continuing in the employ of the master is an actionable wrong which imposes civil liability on the wrongdoer in favor of the master,⁷³ and the fact that there is no fixed period of service does not affect the operation of the rule.⁷⁴ This question usually arises in connection with combinations of laboring men whose acts amount to a conspiracy. The right to recovery of damages, therefore, is discussed in Conspiracy §§ 10-15, and the right to an injunction against the acts complained of with damages is considered in Injunctions §§ 133-145. The legality of acts of labor organizations in relation to employers generally is considered supra § 28 (19), and unfair labor practices are discussed supra §§ 28(43)-28(63).

General rules applicable to civil actions govern actions of this nature.⁷⁵

§ 630. Malicious Procurement of Discharge

a In general

b. Malice; absence of just cause or excuse

a. In General

One who maliciously or without just cause or excuse procures the discharge of a servant from his employment is liable to him for the resulting damages.

As a general rule, one who maliciously or without just cause or excuse procures the discharge of a servant from his employment is liable to him for the resulting damages,⁷⁶ since an employee has a property right in his contract of employment which may not be unlawfully interfered with by another.⁷⁷

It has been held, however, that, if one is acting in the legitimate exercise of his own rights, he is not liable in damages for the discharge of an employee which is the direct or indirect result of his acts.⁷⁸

Thus, it has been said that, if persons in the employment of a master consider others in that employment obnoxious, either personally or because of their character or conduct, they have a perfect right to put to their employer the alternative whether he will discharge the obnoxious person or persons and retain their services, or lose them and retain the obnoxious persons.⁷⁹

It has very generally been held that the rule imposing liability for the malicious procurement of an employee's discharge is applicable, although the service was for no definite or fixed period,⁸⁰ but there is some authority to the contrary.⁸¹ It has been held that the fact that the act of discharge does not give a right of action against the employer himself,⁸² or that the wages are not fixed,⁸³ constitutes no defense, nor is it a defense that defendant acted on the advice of counsel where only compensatory damages are claimed.⁸⁴ Nevertheless, there must be an actual discharge terminating the employment,⁸⁵ since, if the attempt to procure the discharge, although malicious, is not successful, the act is not actionable.⁸⁶

Assignments of wages. Where an employee makes a valid assignment of wages, the assignee is not liable for the discharge of the employee occurring when the assignment is filed with the employer,⁸⁷ at least in the absence of fraud or overreaching in the procurement of the assignment.⁸⁸ Likewise, the assignee is not liable for a refusal to withdraw the assignment to permit the reemployment of the employee.⁸⁹ The fact that the assignment is void, it has been held, does not change the

Trade unions. A trade union wrongfully causing the discharge of an employee may be liable in damages therefor,⁹⁰ and it is no defense that plaintiff's employment was at the will of the employer.⁹² On the other hand, the mere discharge of a nonunion employee brought about by actions of a union that are not unlawful does not render the union so liable.⁹³ A threat of a union to call a strike against an employer violating his agreement to employ union labor exclusively gives no cause of action to a nonunion employee against the union for his discharge resulting from such threat where no malice is charged or unlawful means threatened.⁹⁴ An appeal taken by an expelled member within his union is not a waiver of his right to damages against the union for unlawfully causing his discharge.⁹⁵

b. Malice; Absence of Just Cause or Excuse

The bad motive of the third person who procures the servant's discharge is immaterial where the acts done by him are legal in themselves, and, on the other hand, if there is an intentional interference with the employment relation without just cause or excuse, malice in the sense of actual ill will need not be shown, and it is immaterial by what means the discharge is effected.

Ordinarily, the bad motive of the third person who procures the servant's discharge is immaterial where the acts done by him are legal in themselves and violate no superior right of the servant,⁹⁶ since an act lawful in itself is not rendered unlawful and actionable by a malicious motive, as discussed in Actions § 14. Also, a threat to do that which defendant has a right to do has been held not such a threat as will make defendant liable irrespective of motive.⁹⁷ On the other hand, malice in the sense of actual ill will on the part of the person procuring the discharge need not be shown, it being sufficient that there was an intentional interference without just cause or excuse.⁹⁸

Where the act resulting in the discharge of the employee is without just cause or excuse, it is immaterial by what means the purpose is effected.⁹⁹ In the absence of just cause or excuse for inducing a servant's discharge, defendant will be equally liable whether the means used consist in false, fraudulent,¹ or defamatory statements, coercion or intimidation,² or merely successful persuasion.³ This distinction, however, is to be observed in respect of the means used to effect the discharge: If the means used are false, fraudulent, or slanderous statements,⁴

or intimidation or coercion,⁵ there can be no justification, for the obvious reason that the justification must cover not only the object sought to be attained,⁶ but also the means used to obtain that object,⁷ and on the other hand, if persuasion is the only means used, circumstances may exist which cause the right to immunity from interference with contractual relations to cease to exist.⁸

It has been said that the justification for inducing a breach of contract must be an equal or superior right in the party inducing the breach.⁹ Competition in trade, employment, and business, it has been said, constitutes a sufficient justification for interference resulting in the discharge of a servant.¹⁰ However, there is no sufficient justification where the end sought to be attained is to cause the employee to surrender a claim against defendant,¹¹ or to coerce payment by the employee of an unjust demand,¹² or to prevent him from earning money to prosecute a suit against defendant.¹³ The conduct of the servant in going on a strike and refusing to make up for lost time cannot be used by the employer to effect his discharge from a subsequent employment.¹⁴ Acting on the advice of counsel alone does not constitute a defense.¹⁵

§ 631. — Actions

An action for procuring the discharge of a servant from his employment is based on tort, and not on equitable grounds.

An action for procuring the discharge of a servant from his employment is based on tort,¹⁶ and not on equitable grounds.¹⁷ Such an action, it has been held, is of a type different and distinct from an action for slander,¹⁸ and the fact that the language uttered by defendant in inducing plaintiff's discharge from employment may give rise to a cause of action for slander does not prevent plaintiff from prosecuting an action for wrongful discharge.¹⁹

Limitations. Where there are different statutes of limitation governing actions for slander and wrongful discharge, and neither statute has run, plaintiff has the option of maintaining either action,²⁰ and, if the action is based on wrongful discharge caused by slanderous statements, it is not governed by the statute of limitations applicable to actions for slander.²¹

Pleading. In accordance with the general rules of pleading, the statement, declaration, petition, or complaint in an action by a servant to recover damages from one who wrongfully procures his discharge from employment must allege all the facts necessary to constitute a cause of action.²² Where

(2) Justification for procuring discharge.

§ 632. — Damages

Ordinarily the measure of damages for wrongfully procuring the discharge of an employee is the amount which would have been earned by him except for such interference.

The measure of damages for unlawfully procuring the discharge of an employee is based on the direct and proximate results of the wrongful acts of defendant,³³ and not on the breach of the contract of employment,³⁴ and ordinarily plaintiff may recover the amount which would have been earned by him except for defendant's interference,³⁵ less such sums as were actually earned at other employments.³⁶ The speculative profits of a new or proposed partnership between the employer and the employee are too uncertain to be recoverable.³⁷

Mitigation of damages. The general rule, as between employer and employee, that it is the duty of an employee who has been wrongfully discharged before his term has expired to seek other employment and thus diminish the damages, as discussed supra § 59, has been held to apply in an action by the employee against a third person for wrongfully procuring his discharge,³⁸ although generally the employee is under no obligation to seek or accept employment in other localities,³⁹ or of a different or inferior kind.⁴⁰ It has been held, however, that an employee is under no obligation to minimize the damages by seeking or taking other employment where he is discharged as a result of the intentional wrong of a third person.⁴¹

Mental anguish. Where in procuring the discharge of a servant the one procuring the discharge acted wantonly, wilfully, or maliciously, a recovery may be had for mental anguish.⁴² It has been held that damages for mental anguish are within the sound discretion of the jury, since the law furnishes no way by which to measure reasonable compensation for such injury.⁴³

Exemplary damages may, in a proper case, be recovered,⁴⁴ and, in proportion to the actual damages recovered, this must depend on the particular facts of the case.⁴⁵

Under some statutes the enticing away or the wrongful employment of a servant of another is made a criminal offense.

39 C.J. p 1378 note 43.

Criminal liability of combinations to induce breach of contract of em-tempt to entice away the servant of another may be made a offense, although the servant does not actually leave the employment.⁴⁸ Statutes of this character have been held valid as against various objections,⁴⁹ and have been held to be a legitimate exercise of the police power,⁵⁰ and not in violation of the Civil Rights Bill.⁵¹ It has been held that statutes rendering it a criminal offense to entice away the servant of another were designed to prevent intruders from willfully interfering with a contract of employment, or to entice a person from the premises of another with whom he had contracted, or knowingly to employ a person in the employ of another before such employment has been abandoned.⁵²

§ 634. — Nature and Elements of Offense

All of the elements of the offense must be established to authorize a conviction under statutes imposing criminal penalties for wrongfully enticing away the servant of another.

In order to authorize a conviction under statutes imposing criminal penalties for wrongfully enticing away the servant of another, all of the elements of the statutory offense must be established.⁵³ There must be a valid subsisting contract of service at the time of the enticement,⁵⁴ and, if the statute so provides, the contract must be in writing⁵⁵ and attested by one or more witnesses.⁵⁶ It is further essential that accused had notice of the existence of the contract,⁵⁷ and that there was an enticement,⁵⁸ or employment of the servant without the consent of the master.⁵⁹

No offense is committed by hiring a servant after the term of his employment has expired,⁶⁰ or where the employment is for an indefinite time.⁶¹ It has been held that a conviction does not lie for enticing away,⁶² or employing,⁶³ a servant after he has abandoned a former contract; but there is also some authority to the contrary.⁶⁴

Prior contract with accused. No offense is committed where accused had a prior verbal contract with the laborer, the term of which had not expired, and which the prosecutor enticed him to abandon,⁶⁵ even though the contract was voidable under the statute of frauds,⁶⁶ where treated by the parties thereto as valid.⁶⁷

Who are servants or laborers. "Croppers"⁶⁸ and employees of a cotton mill⁶⁹ have been deemed servants or laborers within the meaning of these statutes. However, one who rents a farm and is to make a crop and have full control of the farm is not a servant,⁷⁰ although he is obliged to pay as rent half of all he makes.⁷¹ Where a tenant contracts that in addition to payment of the stipulated amount he will work for the landlord whenever he can leave his own crop and is needed by the landlord, this does not constitute the relation of master and servant, and the person employing the tenant is not guilty of enticing a "servant."⁷² A superintendent or "boss" is not a servant within such a statute.⁷³

Infant servants. Where an infant makes a contract for his services, one who entices him away from the service is guilty of a violation of the statute,⁷⁴ although the contract is voidable at his instance, since the right to avoid the contract is personal to the infant, as discussed in Infants § 75. However, after he has abandoned the contract, one who employs him is not guilty of violating a statute which makes it an offense to entice away or employ a servant who has contracted in writing to serve another for a specified time, "such contract being in force, and binding upon the parties thereto,"⁷⁵ but it is otherwise under a statute which makes the offense dependent on the mere existence of a contract in writing, eliminating the element of "being in force, and binding upon the parties thereto."⁷⁶ While there is some authority apparently to the contrary,⁷⁷ these statutes are ordinarily held to apply only to contracts entered into by the servant himself and employer,⁷⁸ and, hence, if the contract for the infant's services was made with his father⁷⁹ or guardian,⁸⁰ instead of with the infant himself, a person enticing the servant away is not guilty of an offense where the statute forbids the enticing away of a servant under contract with another. Also, a father, after hiring out his minor child, may entice or order him to quit without committing a punishable offense.⁸¹

§ 635. — Indictment, Complaint, or Affidavit

An indictment, complaint, or affidavit for enticing away or employing the servant of another must state all facts which are made elements of the offense by the statute on which it is based, but ordinarily, an indictment in the language of the statute is sufficient.

General rules relating to complaints and indictments or informations have been applied in prosecutions for enticing away or employing the servant of another. Accordingly, the indictment, complaint, or affidavit must state all facts which are made elements of the offense by the statute on which it is based,⁸² but ordinarily an indictment in the language of the statute is sufficient.⁸³ An indictment for enticing away must either state the Christian name of the laborer or allege that it is unknown,⁸⁴ the fact that the person enticed or employed was a laborer;⁸⁵ the name of the person in whose employ the servant was at the time of the alleged illegal act,⁸⁶ the name of the agent of accused who is alleged to have unlawfully employed the servant,⁸⁷ and the absence of the employer's consent to the re-employment.⁸⁸ However, the acts or words by which the enticement was effected need not be specified,⁸⁹ nor, unless such an averment is necessary to bring the case within the statute, need the indictment specify whether the contract of employment was written or oral.⁹⁰

Issues, proof, and variance. General rules as to issues, proof, and variance apply in prosecutions of the character under consideration.⁹¹ A conviction cannot be had on a charge of enticing away a laborer or servant, by proof of enticing away a renter or share cropper, where the two acts are made different offenses by statute.⁹² Although a statute makes it an offense to entice away any laborer or renter before the expiration of the contract, there can be no conviction under an indictment which charges accused with enticing away a laborer, where it is shown that the person so enticed was a renter.⁹³ So, an indictment for enticing away or hiring a servant of another is not supported by evidence that the hiring was done by defendant's agent or partner in business, and that accused knowingly received a part of the profits of the laborer's service.⁹⁴ Under an indictment for knowingly interfering with a laborer who had contracted in writing to serve a certain person, proof that the servant had contracted in writing to serve a different person constitutes a fatal variance.⁹⁵

General rules relating to burden of proof,⁹⁶ admissibility,⁹⁷ and weight and sufficiency⁹⁸ of evidence apply in prosecutions for interfering with the relation of master and servant.

Ordinarily, the general rules governing the trial of criminal cases apply as to instructions to the jury and questions of law and fact in prosecutions for enticing a servant.

In prosecutions for interference with the relation of master and servant, ordinarily the general rules governing the trial of criminal actions⁹⁹ apply, as with respect to instructions to the jury¹ and questions of law and fact.²

§ 638. Intimidation or Coercion of Servant

Some statutes prohibit the attempt by threats, intimidation, or force to prevent or hinder a person from continuing in any lawful work, or to compel a servant to refrain from working for his master.

Although not an offense at common law,³ some statutes prohibit the attempt, by threats, intimidation, or force, to prevent or hinder a person from continuing in any lawful work, or to compel a servant to refrain from working for his master.⁴ Statutes of this nature have been held valid as against various objections,⁵ and have also been held to manifest a legislative intent to prevent individual interference with the right to work as well as organized effort to accomplish that purpose.⁶ A person may be guilty of unlawfully intimidating or coercing a servant notwithstanding he did not directly interfere with the servant where he aided and abetted in preventing the servant from engaging in his employment.⁷

Under such statutes, it has been held that union men or other employees have the right to seek, by peaceable persuasion, to induce others to leave, or refrain from working for, employers,⁸ if the persuasion is not in the nature of intimidation or coercion.⁹ Thus, it has been held that peaceful picketing is not an offense, notwithstanding the fear of employees was aroused as to the loss of their jobs if the union prevailed.¹⁰ An assault of an employee for the purpose of coercing him from going to work at a strike-bound plant may constitute a violation of the statute notwithstanding the employee was on his way home after an unsuccessful attempt to gain entrance to the plant.¹¹

In conformity with general rules an indictment for intimidating employees to compel them to abandon their employment,¹² or for preventing a servant from performing the duties of his employment,¹³ must state all facts which are made essential elements of the offense charged by the statute on which it is based. The question whether the threats were verbal or in writing,¹⁴ or were direct or implied,¹⁵ need not be alleged.

General rules control the admission and rejection,¹⁶ and the weight and sufficiency¹⁷ of evidence,

§ 639. Bribing Servant with Intent to Influence His Relation with Master

Some statutes make it an offense to give or promise a servant any gift or gratuity without the master's consent for the purpose of influencing his actions in relation to his master's business.

Some statutes make it an offense to give or promise a servant any gift or gratuity without the master's consent for the purpose of influencing his actions in relation to his master's business¹⁹ The validity of such statutes has been upheld,²⁰ but they are to be strictly construed²¹ The provisions of the statute are violated by giving the servant a gratuity to induce him to give defendant secret formulae²² or secret information²³ of his master, regardless of whether or not injury results thereby to the employer²⁴ The statute, being purely penal in character, does not give the wronged master, who received the benefits of the contract, any right to recover back the entire compensation paid.²⁵

§ 1. Definition, Nature, and Status

A master's or an employer's association may be defined as an association which has for its purpose the protection of its members from unjust demands of employees or the adoption of just and equitable dealings between members and their employees; such an association is not a partnership and its members are not partners.

From a consideration of the purpose of particular organizations, as set forth in pertinent cases, a "master's association" or an "employer's association" may be defined as such an association as has for its objects or purposes the protection of its members against unjust demands of employees, and making provision for cooperation in the handling of industrial disputes,¹ or as such an association as has for its object or purpose the adoption of just and equitable dealings between members of the association and their employees.²

erally, as considered in Associations § 1, an unincorporated employers' association which does not contemplate trade and profit is not a partnership,³ and its members are not partners,⁴ although the association may incidentally accumulate property in the promotion of its real purpose.⁵

§ 2. Right and Manner of Organization

Employers of labor may form organizations for their own benefit where the object or purpose is legal, and generally speaking their right in this regard is as extensive as is the right of employees to organize; employers' associations may be either unincorporated or incorporated.

As long as the object or purpose is legal,⁶ employers of labor may form organizations for their own personal benefit,⁷ as may workmen, in accordance with the rules discussed in Master and Servant §§ 28 (1)—28 (42) and in the C.J.S. title Trade Unions § 4, also 63 C.J. p 656 note 15—p 658

To stabilize industry

Members of dress manufacturers' and dress retailers' organizations had right to co-operate to correct abuses or stabilize industry, provided their endeavors did not amount to unlawful boycott or constitute unreasonable restraint of trade—Wolfenstein v Fashion Originators' Guild of America, 280 N.Y.S. 361, 244 App Div 656.

note 35. Their right to form and organize associations is the same⁸ In the absence of a statute to the contrary, that which is lawful for the one is lawful for the other⁹ There is authority for the view that employers have the right to combine to refuse employment to any kind or class of workmen just as fully as employees have the right to combine to refuse to work for any employer who employs men of whom they disapprove or who conducts his business contrary to their views.¹⁰

Employers' associations may be either unincorporated¹¹ or incorporated.¹² Sometimes they are organized into local associations, each local organization having its own distinct name, and several local associations are organized into a national or international association. The local associations are made up of employers in a given locality, and the national or international association is made up of the individual local associations.¹³

§ 3. Dissolution

The withdrawal of one or more members of an employers' association does not necessarily operate as a dissolution of the association.

The withdrawal of one or more members of an employers' association does not ipso facto operate as a dissolution of that body, if it is evident that the association was designed to have a continuing existence.¹⁴

The dissolution of associations generally is discussed in Associations §§ 9, 10.

§ 4. Powers and Liabilities; Constitution and By-Laws

As a general rule an employers' association may and must employ a lawful means to accomplish its object, and by-laws and regulations are part of the machinery by which such an association operates.

As a general rule an employers' association may adopt any lawful means to accomplish its object,¹⁵

but must employ lawful methods for the attainment of its purposes¹⁶ Each member of an employers' association submits his freedom to contract, to a greater or lesser extent, to the will of the association¹⁷

By-laws and regulations are a part of the machinery by which an employers' association operates.¹⁸ A by-law providing for a fine on the members of an employers' association for disobedience of its lawful orders is not unlawful,¹⁹ but, as discussed infra § 5, a member of the association is not liable for the fine or penalty for noncompliance with a by-law or regulation which is not within the purpose or object of the association or which is against public policy.

In comparatively early cases, it has been held or recognized that an association of employers may enact a by-law giving it the right to order a shutdown of the factories of its members, provided the object sought is within its lawful purpose and the means used are lawful,²⁰ and that in a proper case the association may order its members to maintain open shops²¹ So, the view has been taken that, while an individual employer may lawfully agree with a labor union to employ its members only, a contract by which an employer agrees to employ only union labor is contrary to public policy, where the agreement is one which takes in an entire industry of any considerable proportions in a community, so that it operates generally in that community to prevent or seriously to deter workmen from obtaining employment under favorable conditions without joining a union, as considered in Contracts § 267, and that it is against public policy for an employers' association which practically controls the whole trade in a community to promulgate a by-law or regulation or to enter into any agreement or contract having for its object the compelling of workmen to join a particular union as a condition of employment²² or under penalty of loss of their employment²³ Collective bargaining under modern labor relations laws is discussed in Master and Servant §§ 28(1)-28(42), and particular reference should be made to § 28 (28), discussing collective bargaining units.

The rights, powers, and liabilities of an association generally are discussed in Associations §§ 12-17 and the articles of association, constitution, and by-laws of an association generally are considered in Associations § 11.

§ 5. Membership

- a. Eligibility and admission to membership
- b. Termination of membership
- c. Duties and liabilities of members

a. Eligibility and Admission to Membership

As a general rule members of an employers' association may be either corporations, partnerships, or individual natural persons.

Ordinarily, the members of an employers' association may be either corporations,²⁴ partnerships,²⁵ or individual natural persons.²⁶

Acting as a member of an association for an extended period may estop one from denying that he is a member, notwithstanding want of compliance with formalities as to application required by the by-laws.²⁷

Eligibility and admission to membership in an association generally are considered in Associations §§ 22, 23.

b. Termination of Membership

Membership in an employers' association may be terminated by resignation or by expulsion.

As in the case of associations generally, under rules discussed in Associations §§ 24, 25, the ordinary methods of terminating membership in an employers' association are resignation,²⁸ or expulsion.²⁹ The resignation of a member becomes effective on presentation and compliance with the rules of the association without acceptance, unless acceptance is made a prerequisite to resignation.³⁰ The laws of the association sometimes provide for the withdrawal of members, in which case there can be no withdrawal except in the manner and on the conditions prescribed.³¹ The noncompliance with any of the laws of the association may be ground for expulsion.³²

c. Duties and Liabilities of Members

Generally, a member of an employers' association is bound by the provisions of the constitution and by-laws of the association, and he may be held liable for dues or other monetary obligations which have been duly imposed.

By the act of joining the association the member obligates himself to conform to the constitution and by-laws of the association as they existed at the time of his admission into membership,³³ or that may be duly amended during the course of his membership.³⁴ Obedience to the lawful orders of the association is the condition of membership voluntarily encountered by previous assent to the by-laws.³⁵ A decision, order, prohibition, or regulation of the association which has no relation to the object for which it was organized,³⁶ or which is against public policy,³⁷ is not binding on its members.

As to dues, fines, and the like. The benefits to be received from membership in the association are sufficient consideration for the agreement to pay the dues and other sums required by the constitution.

tion or by-laws of the association.³⁸ The fact that a member has been expelled will not cancel his obligation for dues and assessments which he owed at the time of the expulsion.³⁹ Employer and surety on his bond have been held liable for violation of rule of employers' association of which he was a member, fixing maximum wages to be paid by employers.⁴⁰ A member of the association is liable for the amount properly paid out by it on his behalf as a natural consequence of his membership in the association,⁴¹ even though there is no express provision for its recovery in the by-laws of the association.⁴² The fact that the by-laws provide that non-compliance with any of its articles or violation of any of its articles operates as an immediate expulsion of a member does not relieve him for the payment made on his behalf by the association.⁴³ A member of the association is not liable for a fine or penalty for noncompliance with a by-law or regulation which is not within the purpose or object of the association or which is against public policy.⁴⁴

Employers' associations are usually governed by a board of directors or governors.

Ordinarily, employers' associations are governed by a board of directors or governors which has authority to act on all matters which are incident to the ordinary business affairs of the association, in the absence of, or subject to, any limitation by law, charter, or by-laws.⁴⁵

Rules as to officers of associations generally are considered in Associations §§ 19-21.

§ 7. Meetings

General rules governing the conduct of meetings of associations generally apply to meetings of employers' associations.

General rules governing the conduct of meetings of associations, as discussed in Associations § 18, apply as to the meetings of employers' associations.⁴⁶

§ 8. Actions

An action by an employers' association against one of its members is not subject to the objection that a partnership cannot sue one of its members, in view of the rule that such an association is not a partnership; some statutes authorize the bringing of an action in the name of specified officers of the association.

Since an employers' association is not considered a partnership, as discussed supra § 1, there is no objection on that ground to an action by the association against one of its members.⁴⁷

Rules governing actions by or against associations generally are discussed in Associations §§ 35-37.

Who may sue, parties A statute permitting the bringing of actions in the name of specified officers of unincorporated associations, as considered generally in Associations § 35, applies to unincorporated employers' associations,⁴⁸ some statutes permitting such an association to sue in the name of its president⁴⁹ or treasurer.⁵⁰ Where the wrongful acts alleged are directed alike against each of the members of the association, under some circumstances all of them may join as plaintiffs to prevent a multiplicity of suits.⁵¹

The directors of some employers' associations have authority to bring an action to recover the stipulated liquidated damages from a member who has violated a resolution or regulation of the association, on the theory that such an action is a matter which is a mere incident to the ordinary business affairs of the association and, therefore, is within the control of the directors.⁵²

MASTERS IN CHANCERY. See Equity §§ 514-521.

MASTERY. The status, position, or authority of a master, superiority or ascendancy in war or competition; skill or display of skill or technique.¹ "Mastery" has been held synonymous with "influence" see 43 C.J.S. p 378 note 1.2

MASTHEAD. At the very top of the standing mast.²

"Masthead" is a technical term of the printing trade,³ and refers to the page in a publication which shows the title of the publication, the titles of publications which have been merged or consolidated under the name of the publication, the names of publishers and editors, the place where published, the subscription rates, the date of issue, and the frequency of publication.⁴

MASTITIS. Inflammation of the udder of a cow.⁵

MAST SELLING. In old English law, the practice of selling the goods of dead seamen at the mast.⁶

MASTURBATION. Self-defilement; onanism.⁷

MAT. A piece of coarse fabric made by weaving or plaiting sedge, rushes, flags, husks, straw, hemp, or similar material; hence anything of similar form and use, however made.⁸

In the printing trade the word is sometimes applied to a matrix see post p 454 note 19.

MATAMOS. A Spanish term meaning "we kill."⁹

MATCH. A word sometimes used as denoting honorable marriage.¹⁰ It is said that the word has not acquired the meaning of illicit or criminal intercourse.¹¹

MATE. The first officer of a vessel under the master;¹² a respectable officer of the ship.¹³ It has been held that a mate is not included within the meaning of the term "mariner" see 55 C.J.S. p 709 note 69. As to whether a mate is or is not within the meaning of the term "seaman" see the C.J.S. title Seamen § 1, also 56 C.J. p 924 notes 46, 72.

MATERIA. In English law, matter; substance; subject matter.¹⁴

Materia medica. The substances employed as remedial agents.¹⁵ The term is defined and discussed in connection with the practice of medicine in the C.J.S. title Physicians and Surgeons § 1; with respect to the narcotic laws see the C.J.S. title Poisons §§ 10-13.

MATERIAL.

In General

"Material" is a relative term¹⁶ of diversified use¹⁷ and of general signification,¹⁸ but having a well-defined and understood legal significance.¹⁹

As a Noun

Material is some physical substance,²⁰ the term importing the substance matter of which anything is made.²¹ As usually employed in law, the word "material" signifies things furnished to a workman or artisan to be used in his work,²² and it is commonly used to designate any article employed in the erection and completion of buildings,²³ or matter which is intended to be used in the creation of a mechanical structure,²⁴ or, it may be, such articles as are capable of being so used and are furnished for that purpose.²⁵

The word "material" is defined as meaning the substance or matter of which anything is made or may be made;²⁶ everything of which anything is made,²⁷ the substance or substances, or the parts, goods, stock, or the like, of which anything is composed or may be made;²⁸ something that becomes a part of the finished structure;²⁹ something that goes into and forms part of the finished structure;³⁰ such articles only as enter into, and form a part of, the finished structure³¹ or finished product;³² that which goes into, and becomes a part of, a construction or repair;³³ such goods, wares, and merchandise as may be furnished for, and intended to enter into and become directly or indirectly a part of, the completed improvement.³⁴

The word "material" has been held to mean the apparatus necessary to the doing of anything,³⁵ but according to lexicographical definitions³⁶ the term does not include tools, machinery, or appliances used for the purpose of facilitating the work but which are not incorporated into the structure.³⁷ So it does not include machinery that may be used for the manufacture of the materials themselves.³⁸ There is authority for the proposition that a broad and comprehensive interpretation of the word "material" may under various circumstances be translated to mean "food,"³⁹ and under some circumstances the term may include groceries.⁴⁰ However, under other circumstances the contrary has been held.⁴¹ The word "material" has been held to include or not to include various other articles or substances.⁴² What constitutes "material" as used in any particular instrument is determined by the construction of the instrument like any other instrument, in view of the work to be performed and the light of the circumstances surrounding the transaction.⁴³

Comparisons and distinctions "Material" has been held to be synonymous with "element" see 29 C.J.S. p 662 note 32, and has been distinguished from "appliance" see 6 C.J.S. p 75 note 2, and "provisions."⁴⁴ "Materials" have been distinguished from "means,"⁴⁵ "supplies,"⁴⁶ and "tools,"⁴⁷ as well as from "equipment" see 30 C.J.S. p 296 note 21.

42. Electricity

From the physical standpoint electricity is not a material substance, but from the standpoint of parties who are selling and buying it at a price for measured and ascertained quantities it may well be regarded as material, especially since it produces certain definite results in directly forwarding the progress of the work in proportion to the amount used and is itself directly expended in the process.—Johnson-Foster Co v D'Amore Const Co, 50 N.E.2d 89, 93, 314 Mass 416

Lumber

"It is true that the lumber is not consumed immediately, as powder is in blasting, nor is it a part of the structure in the same sense that lumber is that is built into and remains a part of the building, yet, for all this, lumber used, as shown in the present case, is consumed as material necessary to the structure just as completely for all lumber purposes as if it were burned in the using"—Cohn & Goldberg v Walker Constr Co, 175 S.W. 536, 537, 181 Tenn 445.

48. Phrases

(1) "Materials used" relates to materials or things which have gone into the finished structure and have become a part of it. The term would also include material which was consumed, wasted, or destroyed, almost or altogether in the work, even though it was not incorporated in the structure so as to become a constituent part of it.—Corpus Juris cited in Marion Steam Shovel Co v. Union Indemnity Co., 75 S.W.2d 541, 542, 543, 255 Ky 817

(2) "Plumbing material" is the material used in a plumbing job and is understood in a general way to mean such articles as gas, sewer, and water pipes, boilers, sinks, bathtubs, etc.—Lanier v Lovett, 313 P. 391, 392, 25 Ariz 54

(3) "Raw material" see Manufactures § 3 b

(4) "Unwrought material" is material that has not been worked into shape, material which is unlabored, unelaborated, rough, and crude, but the term also implies a material which is capable of being transformed from its crude state to an improved condition, produced by the labor to which it may be subjected.—U. S. v Wells, Fargo & Co., 1 Ct. Cust.App 158, 161.

In law Constituting a matter that is entitled to consideration,⁶³ going to the merits,⁶⁴ such as does or would affect the determination of a case, the effect of an instrument, or the like,⁶⁵ such as must be considered in deciding a case on its merits⁶⁶

Comparisons and distinctions. As an adjective, "material" has been held to be synonymous with

"pertinent"⁶⁷ and interchangeable with "relevant."⁶⁸

"Material" has been distinguished from "essential" see 30 C.J.S. p 1228 note 631, "minor,"⁶⁹ and "trivial,"⁷⁰ and has been contrasted with "casual" see 14 C.J.S. p 28 note 19, and "impertinent" see 42 C.J.S. p 403 note 88

"Material" is not synonymous with "necessary,"⁷¹ "relating to,"⁷² or "touching."⁷³ and the words "material" and "not material" are absolutely contradictory in that they exclude all middle ground and together include everything thinkable.⁷⁴

Phrases employing the word "material" as an adjective are set out in the note.⁷⁵

MATERIALLY. "Materially" is used as a legal term, having a legal meaning and force,⁷⁸ and it is said that the word means and is understood the same in the ordinary vernacular as in its technical definition.⁷⁹ It is defined as meaning in an important manner,⁸⁰ regard,⁸¹ or degree;⁸² essentially;⁸³ really,⁸⁴ substantially⁸⁵

"Materially" has been compared with, or distinguished from, "essentially" see 30 C.J.S. p 1228 note 69, and has been held not synonymous with "unduly"⁸⁶

Phrases employing the word are set out in the note.⁸⁷

MATERIALMAN or MATERIALMEN. A "materialman" is one who furnishes material to be used in the construction of a building, whether furnished direct to the owner or to someone else.⁸⁸ The word "materialman" is frequently employed in lien law, and is defined in this connection in Mechanics' Liens § 89.

"Materialmen" are persons who furnish material to be used in the construction or erection of ships, houses, or buildings;⁸⁹ persons who furnish materials used in the construction or repair of a building or vessel.⁹⁰ The term is not restricted to persons who are in the business of furnishing materials or who have such materials in their possession.⁹¹

MATRIMONY. The union of man and woman as husband and wife; the married state; marriage; wedlock; the relation which is derived from marriage; the status derived from marriage⁹ "Matrimony" has been held to be equivalent to "wedlock"¹⁰

"Lawful matrimony" and "unlawful matrimony." It has been said that the terms "lawful matrimony" and "unlawful matrimony" are confusing.¹¹ Since matrimony is the status derived from marriage, if there is such status it is matrimony and therefore lawful; and where there is no marriage, ceremonial or common, yet the parties cohabit, then for want of a better description the phrase "unlawful matrimony" is used.¹² The unlawful assumption of matrimonial relations is "unlawful matrimony."¹³ However, the expression "lawful matrimony" has little significance since there can be no unlawful matrimony.¹⁴

MATRIX. A plaster or papier-maché impression of type used in stereotyping and electrotyping;¹⁵ a reproduction made on blotting paper which a customer has the printer use by pouring melted type metal thereon, thus obtaining metal reproductions which can be used on printing presses.¹⁶ Printers, newspapers, and advertisers use this means of making further reproductions, insuring uniformity in printing, and permitting the making of large quantities of printed matter from one setting of type or one

MAY.

As a Noun

As a proper noun, "May," the fifth month of the year, containing thirty-one days.⁶⁴

As a Verb

—In General. Generally speaking, "may" is an auxiliary verb.⁶⁵ It is an elastic word⁶⁶ of most common use,⁶⁷ having a wide scope of meaning⁶⁸ or having various meanings,⁶⁹ the particular meaning often being dependent on the context⁷⁰ or the connection in which it is used.⁷¹ As a general rule, it is construed in its ordinary and usual signification where no intention to the contrary is shown.⁷²

As an auxiliary verb, "may" is used for the purpose of qualifying the meaning of another verb by expressing ability,⁷³ competency,⁷⁴ contingency,⁷⁵ liability,⁷⁶ possibility,⁷⁷ probability,⁷⁸ or potentiality.⁷⁹

—As Permissive or mandatory. The verb "may" may be, and usually is, employed as implying per-ty,⁹⁷ liberty to do;⁹⁸ privilege;⁹⁹ lack of restraint;¹ opportunity.² It imports a grant of opportunity or power and is never properly used in a denial, a restriction, or a limitation, except in connection with the word "not."³ It has been defined as meaning to have permission; to be allowed;⁴ to have the power;⁵ to be able,⁶ to do a given thing.

—As Indicating Possibility, Probability, Potentiality, or Contingency. In one of its usable senses⁷ the verb "may" comprehends the idea of possibility,⁸ and, so used, becomes equivalent to the expression "might possibly."⁹ It has been defined as to be possible.¹⁰

It has been said that the word "may" itself naturally looks to the future and indicates doubt instead of certainty;¹¹ it does not carry the idea of reasonable certainty on the one hand,¹² and it does not always imply mere conjecture on the other,¹³ but is suggestive of possibility or contingency, and negatives absolutism with reference to a future happening or event.¹⁴ However, the word may comprehend the idea of probability,¹⁵ and also the thought of what is, with more or less certainty, to be expected.¹⁶ Whether it carries the thought of probability,¹⁷ or of possibility and not probability,¹⁸ often depends on the context. It has been said that it comprises all the possible rather than the reasonably probable consequences,¹⁹ but that it is not to be taken as including every conceivable possibility,²⁰ and that it must be reasonably applied,²¹ having in mind the purpose in view.²² "May," as implying ability or possibility, now oftener expressed by the verb "can,"²³ means potentiality.²⁴

—Comparisons and Distinctions. "May" has been held to be synonymous with "shall"²⁵ and "should,"²⁶ and has been used interchangeably with "can" see 12 C.J.S. p 891 note 70, "must,"²⁷ "shall,"²⁸ "should,"²⁹ and "will."³⁰

"May" has been compared with, or distinguished from, "must,"³¹ "should,"³² and "will,"³³ and has been held not synonymous with "is to."³⁴

—"Might." The word "might" in its verbal sense is the preterit of "may;"³⁵ hence the definitions of "may" have been extended to "might."³⁶

The word is one of common use,³⁷ comprehending the idea of probability³⁸ as well as the idea of possibility.³⁹ It has been said that the word comprises all the possible rather than the reasonably probable consequences.⁴⁰ However, it is not to be taken as including every conceivable possibility,⁴¹ but must be reasonably applied,⁴² having in mind the purpose in view.⁴³ "Might" denotes not alone possibility,⁴⁴ but also ability⁴⁵ and capability.⁴⁶ It has been defined as equivalent to "had power;"⁴⁷ "was possible;"⁴⁸ or "have the physical or moral opportunity to be contingently possible"⁴⁹

It has been held that, while there is a technical distinction between "might" and "could," this distinction is sometimes disregarded, and in popular use the two words have been used interchangeably and the phrase "could or would" has been used as the equivalent of "might," see 12 C.J.S. p 891 note 80, p 892 notes 81, 91. "Might" has been used interchangeably with "should"⁵⁰ and "would."⁵¹

"May be." It has been said that the term "may be" is to be construed with reference to the situation of the subject matter.⁵² It may,⁵³ but does not necessarily,⁵⁴ have reference to the future. The term connotes or implies possibility⁵⁵ or probability,⁵⁶ but it does not connote certainty.⁵⁷ On some occasions it is used as meaning shall be⁵⁸ or shall have been,⁵⁹ and it has been used as equivalent to "possible," "perhaps," and "by chance."⁶⁰ For other cases discussing the meaning of the term see 39 C.J. p 1396 note 21.

Phrases employing the words "may be" are set out in the note.⁶¹

Other phrases employing "may," or the preterit "might," are set out in the note.⁶²

§ 1. Definitions and Distinctions

"Mayhem" at common law is defined as the unlawful and violent deprivation of another of the use of his members as may render him less able in fighting to defend himself or to annoy his adversary.

"Mayhem" at common law is defined as the unlawful and violent deprivation of another of the use of such of his members as may render him less able in fighting to defend himself or to annoy his adversary,¹ but, if the injury disfigures him only, without diminishing his corporal abilities, it does not fall within the crime of mayhem at common law.² By statute the scope of the common-law offense has been extended, and the statutes sometimes contain a definition of the term.³ It has been held that, as used in a statute, the words "to maim" have no technical meaning, and should be construed in their plain ordinary sense,⁴ and, as usually defined, they mean the infliction of some serious bodily injury.⁵

"Maim" and "mayhem" compared. "Maim" and "mayhem" have been regarded as equivalent words; the former but a newer form of the latter, the difference being in orthography and not in sense,⁶ but, as used in a statute, the word "maim" has been construed as meaning "mutilated," and not as synonymous with the act of committing the offense of mayhem as understood in the technical sense.⁷

§ 2. By and upon Whom Committed

Mayhem may be committed by one standing in loco parentis to the injured person.

The offense may be committed by a white man on the body of a slave,⁸ and a statute may apply to an injury to the internal organs of the female as well as to the external organs of the male.⁹ Under some statutes relating to maiming the offense may be committed by one standing in loco parentis to the injured person.¹⁰

Conspiracy. Under the general rule the question as to whether a person is responsible for the offense when actually committed by another, on the theory of a conspiracy, depends on whether or not the act performed is the ordinary and probable effect of the wrongful act, specifically agreed on, so that the connection between them may be reasonably apparent,¹¹ and not a fresh and independent product of the mind of one of the conspirators outside of, or foreign to, the common design.¹² In the Philippines, where several persons attack the injured person but there is no proof of the existence of a conspiracy on the part of the aggressors, it has been held that only the one who actually performed the act charged is guilty of a lesion grave.¹³

§ 3. Nature and Elements

- a. In General
- b. Intent, malice, and premeditation
- c. Nature, means, and extent of injury

a. In General

Mayhem was a felony at common law or at least of a degree of felony.

There is authority for the view that the crime was a felony at the ancient common law,¹⁴ or at least of the degree of felony,¹⁵ but as to whether it was so regarded at common law after the retaliatory punishment was superseded by fine and imprisonment the authorities are not in accord, some taking the view that it is a felony,¹⁶ while others regard it as a misdemeanor,¹⁷ except in the one case of mayhem by castration.¹⁸ The nature of the offense has since been fixed by various statutory provisions as a felony¹⁹ or as a misdemeanor,²⁰ according to the gravity of the injury against which the statute provides or the circumstances under which the injury is inflicted.²¹

Injury sustained in conflict. It has been said that, at common law²² and under some of the statutes,²³ liability as for mayhem is excluded when the act is done by "chance medley, sudden affray, or adventure," or in a fight by mutual consent; and some of these statutes provide that the person inflicting the injury shall be guilty of a high misdemeanor,²⁴ or an aggravated affray.²⁵ However, under some statutes, the offense may be committed during a fight.²⁶

Proof of a conspiracy is not essential, or incidental, to a charge of maiming.²⁷

Murder or manslaughter if death had ensued. Under some statutes the offense may be committed where the circumstances are such that the offense would have constituted murder or manslaughter if death had ensued.²⁸

b. Intent, Malice, and Premeditation

- (1) In general
- (2) Premeditation, deliberation, and lying in wait

(1) In General

Under some statutes, the act must have been committed unlawfully, maliciously, wilfully, intentionally, etc., to constitute mayhem.

At common law the act, to constitute mayhem, must have been done with malice,²⁹ and under the Coventry Act the deed must have been committed of malice aforethought and of a deliberate and premeditated design to do an injury of the sort described, as discussed infra subdivision b (2) (a) of this section; but the malicious intention need not have been directed against any particular person,³⁰ and, although the statute provided against the particular acts "with intention to maim or disfigure," if the intent was of a higher nature, as to murder, and in the attempt the offender did not kill but only maimed, it was an offense within the act.³¹ Statutes have been enacted aimed at acts committed unlawfully,³² maliciously,³³ willfully,³⁴ intentionally,³⁵ on purpose,³⁶ and of malice aforethought, as discussed infra subdivision b (2) (a) of this section, and these elements must be present in order that the act charged may constitute the offense,³⁷ but this is generally all that is necessary,³⁸ and, unless specifically provided for, neither the specific intent to commit the unlawful act charged,³⁹ nor the specific intent to injure as to a particular part of the body,⁴⁰ is necessary. Thus, where the offense is simply the unlawful depriving of the member, etc., the specific intent to maim is not necessary,⁴¹ and a like rule applies under a statute providing for the punishment of maiming when inflicted under such circumstances as would have made the offense murder or manslaughter if death had ensued,⁴² but, under the statutes in some jurisdictions, a specific intent to maim, disfigure, or disable is an essential element of the offense.⁴³ Where malice is an element of the offense, it has been held that it may arise either previous to,⁴⁴ or at the time of, the act.⁴⁵

(2) Premeditation, Deliberation, and Lying in Wait

(a) In general

(b) Injury inflicted in conflict

(a) In General

Malice aforethought and premeditation are essential elements of the crime of mayhem where so provided by statute.

At common law the act might have amounted to mayhem no matter how sudden the occasion, and, under some statutes, malice aforethought is not an essential element,⁴⁶ and proof of premeditation⁴⁷ or deliberation⁴⁸ is not required but under the Coventry Act there not only must have been malice aforethought, but also a lying in wait for the premeditated purpose,⁴⁹ and so some statutes in this country require malice aforethought,⁵⁰ lying in wait,⁵¹ or premeditation⁵² evinced by lying in wait or otherwise.⁵³ "Malice aforethought," as used in a statute relating to mayhem, has been construed as meaning a malicious design to injure,⁵⁴ and it has been held that it is immaterial at what period of time this malicious design was formed.⁵⁵ Under some statutes the premeditated design does not mean that there must be a design to maim the person injured in the exact way or to the extent actually perpetrated.⁵⁶

(b) Injury Inflicted in Conflict

Under some statutes relating to mayhem, there must be a premeditated design if the injury arose from a sudden attack, but it is immaterial when the design was formed.

Under the statutory rule that there must be a premeditated design, as discussed supra subdivision b (2) (a), if the injury arises out of a sudden attack unconnected with any premeditated design against the person, the offense is not committed,⁵⁷ and a like rule has been applied under a statute which did not specifically make a premeditated design an element of the offense.⁵⁸ On the other hand, it is held that even while the act must be done with malice aforethought, it is entirely immaterial at what period of time the design was formed⁵⁹, and in other cases, under provisions which are fully met by proof of the commission of the act, from which the law will presume that it was done unlawfully and maliciously unless the evidence shows the contrary, it does not matter that the intent was formed during the conflict.⁶⁰

(1) In General

While the offense of mayhem at common law could be committed only if the injury diminished the victim's corporal abilities, the offense has been enlarged by statutes

If the injury disfigured only without diminishing the victim's corporal abilities it did not fall within the crime of mayhem at common law.⁶¹ The offense was at an early date enlarged by statutes, many of which declare what acts shall constitute maiming, although some of the acts enumerated amount to mayhem at common law and some do not,⁶² the blending of them in the same definition putting all of them on the same legal footing,⁶³ as under provisions directed against the depriving of a human being of a member of his body or disfiguring, mutilating, disabling, or rendering it useless, and sometimes expressly defining the acts so resulting as mayhem or maiming,⁶⁴ or making punishable maiming, wounding, or disfiguring, in more general terms,⁶⁵ with intent to maim and disable.⁶⁶ The

66. Ill.—People v. Saylor, 149 NE 767, 319 Ill. 205. 40 C.J. p 5 note 85.

mere fact that in the body of a statute which enumerates acts, some of which do and others do not constitute mayhem at common law, such acts are not designated as mayhem does not prevent the statutory offense from being regarded as mayhem,⁶⁷ but the failure of the statute to designate the acts enumerated as "mayhem" has been regarded as immaterial.⁶⁸ The statutory crime of mayhem includes only those injuries which are designated specifically or impliedly by the statute,⁶⁹ and there is authority for the view that since the offense has been fully regulated by statute, the crime of mayhem includes only those injuries which are designated by the statute.⁷⁰

(2) Means

Under some statutes relating to mayhem the instrument used or the means employed in committing mayhem is immaterial.

Under some statutes the particular means or instrument used in committing the offense is immaterial,⁷¹ as where the statute is aimed at a disfigurement "by means of a knife or other instrument."⁷² Moreover, some statutes expressly provide that it is immaterial by what means or instruments,⁷³ or in what manner,⁷⁴ the injury is inflicted. It has been held that the offense may be committed by "biting," under statutes aimed at "cutting,"⁷⁵ or "slitting,"⁷⁶ but, on the other hand, there is authority for the view that a "biting" is not necessarily a "cutting"⁷⁷ or a "slitting"⁷⁸ within some statutes.

The word "bite" in a statute making it unlawful to bite off a member of another person's body has been held not to mean a severance by pinching with the application of some tool or implement, but severance produced by means of the teeth.⁷⁹ In order to inflict a wound within the meaning of a statute aimed at wounding with intent to maim it has been held necessary to use an instrument of some description.⁸⁰

(3) Extent

Where the inhibition is directed against an injury which disfigures, it is not necessary that the whole member be mutilated or detached where the injury causes a disfigurement.

Where the inhibition is directed against an injury which disfigures, it is not necessary that the whole member should be mutilated or detached if the injury impairs comeliness.⁸¹ However, the cutting or biting off of a small portion of the member which does not disfigure the person, and could only be discovered by close inspection, or examination, when attention is directed to it, will not constitute mayhem under some statutes,⁸² nor, it has been held, does the biting off of a portion of a member necessarily show that the injured person was deprived of the use of such member.⁸³ Under some statutes a mere disfigurement of the organ referred to is not sufficient,⁸⁴ unless such disfigurement results in rendering the organ useless.⁸⁵ The injury is ordinarily sufficient to bring the case within the statute where it is such as to deprive the injured person of the organ for the ordinary and usual practical purposes of life.⁸⁶ Under a provision defining maim as, among other acts, the depriving of one of any member of his body, if the act is once completely committed the offense is not less complete because the member was put back and grew to its proper place.⁸⁷ The crime may be complete notwithstanding there is a bare possibility that the injured person may recover the use of the member,⁸⁸ or that the member is not completely severed during the encounter, if it is subsequently necessary to sever it.⁸⁹ Moreover, there is authority for the view that the injured person is not bound to submit to a surgical operation to relieve accused of the results of his unlawful acts.⁹⁰ It has been stated generally that "mayhem" implies a permanent injury or crippling,⁹¹ and it is generally held that, by the disabling of a limb or member, the statute contemplates a permanent injury, not a mere temporary disabling.⁹²

Construction of statutes. These statutes, like other penal statutes must be strictly construed in favor of accused,⁹³ but this does not mean that the strictness must be so narrow as to emasculate the purpose of the statute or to impair the intention of the legislature.⁹⁴ The simple mayhem statutes existing before and after common-law offenses were abolished must be construed in the light of the common law.⁹⁵

§ 4. — Assault with Intent to Maim

Under some statutes, it is an offense to commit an assault with intent to maim, and accomplishment of the mayhem is not necessary.

Sometimes the statute provides specifically against certain assaults with intent to maim.⁹⁶ While the phrase "with intent to maim" in a charge of assault with intent to maim is sometimes regarded as simply descriptive of the character of the offense,⁹⁷ where the intent to maim is wanting, the offense is not made out, although there may have been an assault.⁹⁸ A charge of assault with intent to maim cannot be supported as to the intent charged where there is no proof of an intent to commit an injury which would constitute a maiming.⁹⁹ On charge of an assault with intent to maim, accomplishment of the mayhem is not necessary, since the

Where maiming is a felony, an assault with intent to maim is an assault with intent to commit a felony under a statute punishing the latter offense.²

§ 5. — Attempt to Maim

In order to constitute an attempt to commit mayhem, there must be both an overt act and a specific intent.

In order to constitute an attempt to commit mayhem within a statute there must be some overt act in part execution of the intent to commit the offense,³ and there must also exist the specific intent to commit the offense.⁴ Apparent ability to commit the offense is also necessary,⁵ and, if the means employed are both absolutely and apparently inadequate, the attempt is not the subject of criminal prosecution.⁶

§ 6. Defenses

Self-defense is a good defense to an indictment for mayhem, but the resistance must be in proportion to the injury offered.

In addition to the defenses available in all criminal prosecutions, as discussed in Criminal Law §§ 38-54, the nonexistence of one or more of the essential elements of the offense of mayhem is of course a defense. The fact that the acts charged were committed in legitimate and necessary self-defense is a good defense to an indictment or to an appeal of mayhem at common law, and may be shown in a prosecution under the modern statutes,⁷ but the defense can only be sustained by proof that the resistance was in proportion to the injury offered,⁸ and of course is not sustained where there is nothing to show that the acts of the injured person would warrant a reasonable person in believing that an attack would be made.⁹ The mere fact that accused voluntarily entered into the conflict during which the acts charged were committed does not prevent him from relying on this defense.¹⁰

Forcible ejection of accused from a certain building The fact that the acts complained of were committed while the injured person was in the exercise of a legal right and without the use of undue force, attempting to eject accused from a certain building is not a defense.¹¹

Right of one standing in loco parentis to chastise the injured person is not a defense where it appears that the chastisement inflicted was beyond any real or apparent necessity.¹²

Mutual conflict. While under some statutes the mere fact that the injury occurred in the course of an altercation between accused and the injured person is no defense, under other statutes liability as for mayhem is excluded when the act is done by "chance medley, sudden affray or adventure," or in a fight had by consent, as discussed supra § 3

§ 7. Indictment and Information; Appeal of Mayhem

a. In general

b. Joinder of offenses

a. In General

At common law the remedy for the offense of mayhem was by appeal of mayhem, but the statutory offense is prosecuted by indictment or information.

At ancient common law, if the injured person sought satisfaction by loss of member for member, his remedy was by an appeal of mayhem,¹³ and the sovereign punished the injury to his subject by an indictment for mayhem.¹⁴ The various statutory offenses are prosecuted by indictment or information.¹⁵

Surplusage A defective¹⁶ or unnecessary¹⁷ averment in an information may be disregarded as surplusage where the remaining averments sufficiently allege an offense within the statute.

Negating statutory exceptions Conditions which will prevent the application of a particular statutory provision need not be negated in the indictment where they are contained in distinct clauses.¹⁸

Issues, proof, and variance. The general rules as to issues, proof, and variance in criminal prosecutions apply in prosecutions for mayhem.¹⁹

b. Joinder of Offenses

Under a statute enumerating disjunctively several offenses connected with the same transaction, or providing several means in the alternative whereby the offense may be committed, an indictment may charge them conjunctively.

Where the words of the statute are in the disjunctive, with intent to maim or with intent to disfigure, an averment of either is sufficient;²⁰ and the general rule is applied that, under a statute enumerating disjunctively several offenses connected with the same transaction²¹ and with the intent necessary to commit the offense,²² they may be alleged conjunctively; and must be so alleged when embraced in one count.²³ So, under a statute providing several means in the alternative whereby the offense may be committed, an indictment may charge them conjunctively as one offense.²⁴

It is sufficient to allege the commission of the offense of mayhem in the language of the statute.

Where the statute defines what acts shall constitute the offense, it is sufficient to allege the commission of such acts in the terms of the statute,²⁵ although the exact language need not be employed if equivalent terms²⁶ or, it has been held, more comprehensive terms²⁷ are used; and, where there are joined to the essential statutory words other allegations which clearly charge the offense, it is sufficient.²⁸ Where, however, material terms of the statute are omitted, the indictment is insufficient.²⁹

Assault with intent to maim Similarly in case of an assault with intent to maim, the offense is properly alleged in the terms of the statute³⁰

§ 9. — Averments as to Particular Matters

- a. In general
- b. Feloniousness
- c. Willfulness, malice, and unlawfulness
- d. Premeditation and lying in wait
- e. Means, manner, and circumstances of inflicting injury
- f. Nature and extent of injury

a. In General

An indictment under a statute making the intent to maim an essential element of the offense must allege such intent.

An indictment under a statute making the intent or purpose an essential element of the offense must allege such intent,³¹ and the intent charged must be to accomplish the particular result against which the statute is directed.³²

Assault with intent to maim. There is authority for the view that in the case of an assault with intent to maim the intent should be alleged in the words of the statute.³³ However, it is sufficient if the offense is so alleged,³⁴ without setting forth particularly the manner in which it was intended to inflict the injury.³⁵

b. Feloniousness

As a general rule, where a statutory offense is a felony, it is necessary that the word "feloniously" be used.

At common law, if the offense is regarded as a felony in both the appeal of mayhem and the indictment, the offense must be alleged to have been committed feloniously,³⁷ but, where the offense is not regarded as a felony, a count for a common-law mayhem should not contain the word feloniously.³⁸ Where a statutory offense is a felony, it is ordinarily necessary that the word "feloniously" should be used,³⁹ but it has been held that, where the word enters into no part of the definition of the offense as created by the statute, it is properly omitted in the indictment.⁴⁰

The indictment should allege that the act was done maliciously, willfully, and unlawfully, where these are essential elements of the offense of mayhem.

It should be alleged that the act was done maliciously,⁴¹ willfully,⁴² voluntarily,⁴³ or unlawfully,⁴⁴ or that it was done on purpose,⁴⁵ where these elements are essentials of the statutory offense; but, where the foregoing are not elements of the offense, they need not be alleged,⁴⁶ and, where the charge as a whole shows that the essential elements have been alleged, it is ordinarily sufficient.⁴⁷

d. Premeditation and Lying in Wait

Where premeditated design and lying in wait are essential elements of the offense of mayhem, the indictment should allege them.

Where "malice aforethought"⁴⁸ or "lying in wait"⁴⁹ is an essential element of the offense, the indictment should allege it. Also, where "premeditated design" is essential, it should be alleged,⁵⁰ but the circumstances showing it need not be alleged.⁵¹ Where malice aforethought is not an element of the offense, it need not be alleged.⁵² Under a statute providing that the offense may be committed without lying in wait, the failure of the indictment to allege whether or not the offense was committed either with or without lying in wait is immaterial.⁵³

e. Means, Manner, and Circumstances of Inflicting Injury

Under some statutes relating to mayhem failure to describe or specify the means used, or the manner of its use, does not render the indictment insufficient.

Under some statutes failure to describe or specify⁵⁴ with particularity⁵⁵ the instrument or means used, or the manner of its use,⁵⁶ or the circumstances,⁵⁷ does not render the accusation insufficient. There is authority for the view that, under an indictment for the statutory offense of cutting and wounding with intent to maim, it is not necessary to designate the instrument with which the wound was inflicted,⁵⁸ and that an allegation in the alternative as to the weapon used does not render the accusation insufficient;⁵⁹ but the means should be specified if it is sought to bring the case within a general provision of the statute as to the means used.⁶⁰ An express allegation that accused assaulted the injured person is not necessary.⁶¹ However the fact that the information or indictment states that accused assaulted the injured person does not render it defective,⁶² even though it contains no statement that a battery was committed.⁶³

Murder or manslaughter if death had ensued. Under a statute providing for the punishment of maiming or disfiguring inflicted under such circumstances as would have made the offense murder or manslaughter if death had ensued, it is not necessary to allege that the offense would have been murder or manslaughter if death had ensued;⁶⁴ but it is sufficient⁶⁵ and essential⁶⁶ to state the circumstances which would have made the offense murder or manslaughter if death had ensued.

f. Nature and Extent of Injury

Where the statute specifically punishes, as an offense, a disabling or disfiguring, as a result of an injury, the indictment should charge that the victim was thereby maimed.

At common law the indictment must set forth particularly the consequences following the injury inflicted, and must include the allegation that the injured person was thereby maimed.⁶⁷ So, under statutes it should be charged that he was maimed or disfigured,⁶⁸ or disabled,⁶⁹ where the statute punishes, as an offense, a disabling or disfiguring by the infliction of certain injuries, notwithstanding a fixed purpose to maim is not an element of the offense,⁷⁰ although there is authority for the view that, if the term used is more comprehensive than that used in the statute, the charge is not defective.⁷¹ Generally speaking, an averment which fails to describe an injury which is within the statute is not sufficient,⁷² but the nature of the injury need not be set forth more specifically than in the general language of the act.⁷³ Under statutes which enumerate several different injuries, denominated "mayhem" therein, the indictment need not aver this statutory conclusion.⁷⁴ Also, under a statute which prescribes a punishment for certain acts without giving a name to the offense, it has been held that an indictment need not aver that the victim was maimed,⁷⁵ and the fact that the indictment designates the crime as mayhem does not affect the validity of the verdict.⁷⁶

Assault and specific injuries, with intent to maim. Where the statute punishes specific injuries inflicted with intent to maim and disfigure, it is not necessary to allege that accused did maim and disfigure.⁷⁷ In an indictment for assault with intent to maim, it is not necessary to set forth what member of the body accused intended to destroy.⁷⁸

Permanent injury. In the absence of a demurrer, an objection that the information does not allege that the injury or disfiguration is permanent in character is not well taken.⁷⁹

§ 10. Evidence

- a. Presumptions and burden of proof
- b. Admissibility
- c. Weight and sufficiency

a. Presumptions and Burden of Proof

In a prosecution for mayhem, the state has the burden of proving all the essential elements of the offense, and the usual presumptions arising in criminal cases will be indulged.

As in other criminal cases, as discussed in Criminal Law § 566 et seq, the prosecution must prove every element of the offense as charged.⁸⁰

Intent. Where a specific intent to maim, disfigure, or disable is an element, the intent may generally be presumed from the circumstances connected with the commission of the act,⁸¹ or from the commission of the prohibited act unless the contrary appears,⁸² and further proof need not be adduced to show intent. Moreover, where a specific intent is not required by the terms of the statute, the intent to inflict an injury may be presumed from the commission of the act,⁸³ and in such case, if the means used in the commission of the offense were such as would in the manner used ordinarily result in maiming, the law presumes that the intention was to maim, without regard to the knowledge of the party using such means as to whether or not they were calculated to maim.⁸⁴ On the other hand, there is authority for the view that the doing of the act does not raise a presumption that it was done with the specific intent,⁸⁵ and no presumption that the specific intent existed may be indulged where the result which would constitute the offense is not the ordinary or natural result of the instrumentality used by accused.⁸⁶ Under a charge of assault with intent to maim, where no maiming actually results, there is not any presumption of fact or of law that accused intended that which his act in fact produced,⁸⁷ but the specific intent may be inferred from the surrounding circumstances,⁸⁸ and, where there has been an actual maiming, the existence of the specific intent may be inferred from the fact of maiming.⁸⁹

Malice, unlawfulness, and willfulness. It may be presumed from the commission of the act that it was done unlawfully,⁹⁰ maliciously,⁹¹ or on purpose.⁹² Moreover, malice may be presumed from the instrumentality used.⁹³

Premeditation and lying in wait. It has been held, under a statute making a premeditated design evinced by lying in wait or otherwise an element of the offense, that the existence of the design cannot be found from the mere proof of the commission of the act.⁹⁴ There is authority, however, for the view that a lying in wait⁹⁵ or malice aforethought⁹⁶ may be presumed from the circumstances surrounding the case

Self-defense On the theory that the burden of proof never shifts, as discussed in Criminal Law § 566, it is erroneous to charge that, if the injury is found to have been inflicted, the burden is on defendant to satisfy the jury that he acted in his necessary self-defense,⁹⁷ but the contrary view has also been taken⁹⁸ Where self-defense is regarded as an affirmative defense, it has been held that it may arise as an issue on the evidence introduced by the prosecution⁹⁹

Extent of injury Where the injury is such as would ordinarily be permanent, the presumption that it is permanent will be indulged in the absence of a showing to the contrary.¹

b. Admissibility

In a prosecution for mayhem, evidence which tends to establish a particular issue involved may be considered, but evidence which has no bearing on any matter at issue or which otherwise violates rules of evidence should not be admitted

§ 11. Trial

- a. Questions of law and fact
- b. Instructions
- c. Verdict

a. Questions of Law and Fact

Generally, in a prosecution for mayhem, the question of the accused's guilt and all other questions of fact in issue are for the jury.

In accordance with the rules governing criminal prosecutions generally, in a prosecution for mayhem the question whether the offense has been committed is a question for the jury,¹⁵ and this includes questions as to certain specific elements of the offense, such as intent,¹⁶ malice,¹⁷ premeditation,¹⁸ and means used.¹⁹ Likewise, the question as to whether the injury was of such character as would render accused guilty of the offense charged has been held to be a question for the jury.²⁰

Guilt of person who did not personally inflict injury. The question as to whether the act charged was the ordinary and probable effect of the wrongful act specifically agreed on by conspirators so as to render liable one of the conspirators who had not actually committed the act is ordinarily for the jury.²¹

Defenses. On an issue of self-defense, where there is sufficient evidence thereon, questions as to whether accused had reasonable cause to apprehend the immediate danger of death or great bodily harm,²² as to which person was the aggressor, and as to whether accused used more force than was necessary,²³ and as to whether certain alleged threats by the prosecuting witness had been communicated to accused,²⁴ should be submitted to the jury.

b. Instructions

The court must instruct on the law of the case, defining the offense charged, and submit all questions of fact to the jury.

General rules as to instructions, as discussed in Criminal Law § 1189 et seq, apply in prosecutions for mayhem, including the statutory maim, or for injuring or assaulting with intent to maim.²⁵ The court must submit all questions of fact to the jury and cannot assume as true what must be found by the jury as a fact,²⁶ but an instruction is not open to the objection that the court has assumed as existing a particular fact, where it appears from the

Referring to sulphuric acid as poison

(1) It has been held that the court did not commit error in referring in its instructions to sulphuric acid as a poison—Hiller v State, 218 N W 386, 116 Neb. 582, 58 A.L.R. 1222

whole instruction that the question has been fairly submitted for the determination of the jury.²⁷ Where the law provides that the acts must be done "willfully" or "maliciously," the court should so instruct the jury,²⁸ and it has been held that the court should define or explain such terms to the jury.²⁹ Moreover, the circumstances may be such as to require a requested instruction emphasizing a particular element of the offense charged.³⁰ The court should not submit to the jury a theory of guilt which is not covered by the formal accusation,³¹ nor should a charge be given which permits a conviction, even though a necessary element of the offense may have been lacking.³² The court should not submit to the jury a count in the indictment which is not supported by the evidence.³³

Under general rules of instructions in criminal cases, the court may properly refuse a requested charge which does not contain a correct statement of the law applicable,³⁴ as where it imposes a greater burden of proof on the prosecution than the law requires of it,³⁵ or a requested instruction which has already been covered sufficiently by other instructions.³⁶

Defenses. The court need not instruct as to a theory of defense for which there is no support in the evidence.³⁷ A charge on the subject of self-defense should give a correct statement of the law applicable to the subject,³⁸ and it is ordinarily the duty of the court to charge on questions as to self-defense where there is warrant for such charge in the evidence,³⁹ at least where such charge has been requested by accused,⁴⁰ and the instruction should be given, it has been held, even though the question arises as an issue solely on the evidence introduced by the prosecution.⁴¹ However, a requested charge seeking the benefit of this defense is properly refused where it omits certain necessary elements of the law as to self-defense,⁴² and it is neither necessary nor proper to give an instruction with respect to this defense where there is no evidence to authorize such instruction.⁴³ Where the court submits the question of self-defense as an unlimited right, not qualified by any question as to provocation by accused, it is not necessary to instruct as to the right of accused to seek the injured person for an explanation with respect to certain difficulties between them.⁴⁴

In order to sustain a conviction for mayhem, a verdict of guilty must be certain as to the elements specially found, but reasonable certainty is usually all that is required.

In a prosecution for mayhem a verdict of guilty must be certain as to the elements specially found.⁴⁵ Where accused is acquitted of the greater offense charged in the indictment and found guilty of a lesser grade embraced in such charge, the verdict should show with reasonable certainty that the jury has found him guilty of the offense of the lesser grade,⁴⁶ but reasonable certainty is usually all that is required.⁴⁷ The mere failure to designate the offense where both greater and lesser offenses are submitted is not fatal where the verdict fixes a

The punishment on conviction for mayhem is regulated by statute, which either fixes the grade of the offense and assesses the punishment or merely assesses the punishment.⁵¹ At the ancient common law accused on conviction was punished by the loss of the same member of which he had caused the loss,⁵² but later this mode of punishment went out of use and then by the common law as it stood for some time the offense was punished by fine or imprisonment.⁵³

14. Ala.—Holt v. Long, 174 So. 759, 760, 284 Ala. 369.

In a different sense the word "meal" is defined as food that is eaten to satisfy the requirements of hunger;¹⁵ the portion or quantity of food taken either at one of the regular times for refreshment or on occasions of hunger to satisfy the appetite¹⁶

The question as to what constitutes a meal is intimately connected with, and controlled by, individual tastes, conditions of diet, and other circumstances, and it is obviously impossible for a court to lay down a general rule of law determinative of the question which will be applicable in all cases.¹⁷ It is a matter of common knowledge that to one who is accustomed to simple sustenance a sandwich with a beverage would constitute a meal.¹⁸ On the other hand, the generally accepted concept of a meal is that it not only consists of a larger quantity of food than that which ordinarily comprises a single sandwich, but that usually it consists of a diversified selection of foods which would not be susceptible of consumption in the absence of at least some articles of tableware and which could not conveniently be consumed while one was standing or walking about.¹⁹ Thus, while a "hot dog" or hamburger sandwich is the type of food frequently offered for sale to, and desired by, persons who wish to eat something while walking about, it is not the type of food generally ordered by a person who patronizes a hotel, restaurant, or other public eating establishment with the intention of securing a meal.²⁰ It also has been stated that a meal implies that that which will be served will be more substantial in satisfying the normal appetite than that which is served at a soda fountain in a drug store,²¹ since a normal person would not consider that the food and drink which he could secure at such a place would constitute a meal one day after another, and, although it might provide subsistence, it surely would not meet the demand of normal living.²²

What constitutes a meal under statutes permitting the sale of intoxicants when served with meals is discussed in Intoxicating Liquors § 266; and what constitutes a meal within the meaning of an order establishing a minimum wage for women and minors is discussed in Master and Servant § 152. License tax provisions relating to meals are discussed in Licenses § 30 a, d (2) (f).

Phrases employing the word are set out in the note ⁷¹

The word "mechanic" is generally construed in its ordinary meaning and acceptation,⁷³ and, while it is a term somewhat loosely applied,⁷⁴ as a general rule, in order to be a mechanic, it is necessary that the person should be an operative engaged in a business requiring some particular skill in doing work.⁷⁵ The word connotes a manual occupation;⁷⁶ a performance of mechanical labor, or work at one of many constructive trades, as a principal means of livelihood,⁷⁷ although it has been said that it always excludes agricultural laborers or laborers who work with pick, shovel, spade, or similar tools.⁷⁸ At one time the word was synonymous with "artisan" see 6 C.J.S. p 779 note 6, but it now is commonly restricted to a workman who is skilled in constructing, repairing, or using machinery.⁷⁹ It is used in contradistinction to contractors, superintendents, capitalists, or mere owners of machinery,⁸⁰ and it includes all mechanics, whether master workmen or journeymen.⁸¹

In its broadest sense, a mechanic is any one who is a skilled worker with tools;⁸² and the term is defined as meaning any skilled worker with tools;⁸³ one who is skilled in the use of tools or instruments;⁸⁴ one skilled in a mechanical occupation or art;⁸⁵ one who practices any mechanic⁸⁶ or mechanical⁸⁷ art or trade,⁸⁸ one who follows a mechanical occupation for a living;⁸⁹ one employed in mechanical or manual labor;⁹⁰ a workman or laborer other than agricultural;⁹¹ one actually engaged with his own hands in constructive work;⁹² one engaged in operating a machine or machinery;⁹³ one who works and performs services with machinery or mechanics;⁹⁴ one who works with machines or instruments.⁹⁵

The word has been broadly defined as meaning an artificer;⁹⁶ an artisan;⁹⁷ an artist;⁹⁸ a handicraftsman;⁹⁹ a laborer;¹ a mechanician;² an operative.³

More comprehensive definitions are to the effect that a mechanic is one skilled or employed in shaping and uniting materials, as wood, metal, etc., into any kind of a structure, machine, or other objects requiring the use of tools or other instruments.⁴

a workman employed in shaping and uniting materials, such as wood, metal, etc., into some kind of structure, machine, or other object, requiring the use of tools,⁵ a person whose occupation is to construct machines, or goods, wares, instruments, furniture, and the like.⁶

Defined in connection with the building trade, a mechanic is a person skilled in all the trades which have to do with the construction of buildings;⁷ a workman who shapes and applies material in the construction of houses.⁸

In the subjoined notes examples are given of particular persons or occupations which the term has been held to include,⁹ and which the term has been held not to include.¹⁰

The term "mechanic" has been defined and discussed as used in exemption statutes in Exemptions § 24 d (4); and as used in statutes providing for mechanics' liens see Mechanics' Liens § 87. The admissibility in evidence of books of mechanics is treated in Evidence § 683 d, and for other references to mechanics in the law of evidence see the index to that title.

Phrases employing the word are set out in the note.¹³

As an Adjective

The word "mechanic," when employed as an adjective, means pertaining to manual labor,¹⁴ involving manual skill¹⁵

rived from the Latin "mechanicus" and the Greek "mechane."¹⁶ It has a very broad meaning,¹⁷ and has a primary meaning¹⁸ as well as derivative meanings more or less remote from the primary sense of the term.¹⁹

Primarily, the word "mechanical" means pertaining to machinery,²⁰ of, pertaining to, or concerned with, machinery or mechanism;²¹ having relation to, produced or accomplished by, the use of mechanism or machinery;²² pertaining to, or in accordance with, the principal laws of mechanics;²³ of the nature or character of a machine or machinery,²⁴ pertaining to, governed by, or in accordance with, mechanics or the laws of motion;²⁵ pertaining to the science of mechanics or mechanism;²⁶ resembling a machine.²⁷

The term is frequently defined as meaning employment in manual labor,²⁸ engaged in manual labor;²⁹ of, pertaining to, or concerned with, manual labor;³⁰ belonging to or relating to those who live by hand labor,³¹ of the artisan class;³² pertaining to artisans or mechanics or their implements;³³ skilled in mechanics.³⁴

The word "mechanical" is also defined to mean done as if by a machine or without conscious exertion of will, proceeding from habit, not from intention or reflection, as a mechanical action or movement;³⁵ appertaining to or exhibiting constructive power;³⁶ made or formed by a machine or with tools³⁷

Mechanical pursuit The term "mechanical pursuit" is defined as a business, calling, or occupation which cannot be utilized unless resort is had to the use of some machinery or instrument of force, or appliance of power, in aid of manual work, in some physical undertaking, in which the intervention or interaction of a superior mind is not required. That is, the occupation must be one by which the object realized is not dependent for its confection on the exertion of a controlling intellect, but rather on the adaptation of some helping mechanism, or use of some auxiliary tool or instrument³⁸ In determining whether a particular occupation is a mechanical pursuit or a profession, the test, as stated in numerous definitions and by many authorities, is whether or not the intellectual quality predominates over manual skill in performing the duties of the particular calling. If the mental aspect is controlling, then the pursuit is classified as a profession. If skill in the manipulation of the hands, tools, and machinery is emphasized over the mental side, then the calling is classified as a mechanical pursuit.³⁹ There are certain callings which require both intellect and skill, but in such instances the pursuit is classified or listed as a profession, as in the case of artists, dentists, surgeons, etc., and there are instances where it is extremely difficult to determine which of the two qualities is most emphasized or required in the proper carrying out of the duties of the occupation. All skilled artisans engaged in mechanical pursuits by the very nature of their occupation require some education, periods of apprenticeship, and experience, even though the state or the subdivision thereof has not passed legislation to regulate them⁴⁰ What constitutes a "mechanical pursuit" within the meaning of statutes dealing with the employment of convict labor is treated in Convicts § 26.

Other phrases employing the word are set out in the note,⁴¹ and for additional phrases as to which more recent adjudications have not been found see 40 C.J. p 22 note 17, p 23 notes 20-22, 24, 25.

§ 1. Definition, Nature, and Distinctions

a. Definition and Nature

A mechanic's lien or, as otherwise termed, a materialman's lien is a lien created by constitutional or statutory provision in favor of one who has performed work or furnished material in and for the erection or improvement of a building. It is a particular lien, and by some authorities is regarded as merely a right to charge the property which it affects with the payment of a particular debt.

A mechanic's lien or, as sometimes termed with respect to materials furnished, a materialman's

lien¹ is a species of lien created by constitution or statute which exists in favor of a person who has performed work or furnished material in and for the erection of a building.² In a narrow and restricted sense, a mechanic's lien is a lien for labor,³ as distinguished from a materialman's lien,⁴ but in a broad sense it means a lien for material as well as for labor,⁵ and it is frequently used as a general term to designate liens of contractors, subcontractors, laborers, and materialmen.⁶ Where it is secured by constitutional provisions the lien of a mechanic is one of the highest possible dignity.⁷

It is not a general,⁸ but a particular,⁹ lien, and has been said to be a secret lien¹⁰ during the period between the time when it attaches and the time when the claim or statement is filed or recorded,¹¹ where, under the statutes, it attaches at, or relates back to, a time prior to the date when the claim or statement is filed or recorded, as discussed infra § 177. It has also been described as a mere preference¹² or privilege¹³ conferred by statute.

As property. While some authorities declare that the lien is property or an interest in property,¹⁴ according to other authorities the lien is neither property¹⁵ nor a right in or to property,¹⁶ but is a mere right or remedy to charge the property which it affects with the payment of a particular debt,¹⁷ to which it is incident.¹⁸ An inchoate mechanic's lien is a present property right in the property to which it relates, a right coupled with an interest.¹⁹

Equitable character. Although, as stated infra subdivision c of this section, a mechanic's lien is not recognized in equity apart from the constitutional or statutory provisions which created it, it has been held that a mechanic's lien is of an equitable character,²⁰ that it springs out of the appropriation and use by the landowner of the mechanic's labor or the furnisher's materials,²¹ and that it rests on broad grounds of natural equity,²² natural justice,²³ and commercial necessity.²⁴ On the other hand it has been held that such a lien is legal, in its essential nature, rather than equitable.²⁵

b. Distinctions

A mechanic's lien differs in some respects from all other liens, and has been distinguished from the lien claim or statement.

A mechanic's lien is in its nature peculiar,²⁶ differing in some respects from all other liens known to the law.²⁷

Mortgage or security. Like a mortgage, a mechanic's lien has the element of security for debt,²⁸ and it has been declared to be an encumbrance²⁹ or in the nature of a mortgage.³⁰ Nevertheless a mortgage and a mechanic's lien are substantially different,³¹ such as with respect to the mode of their creation, a mortgage lien being created by contract and a mechanic's lien being created by statute.³² The right to claim a mechanic's lien and the right to claim a priority for such lien over an antecedent mortgage are quite different in their nature³³

Vendor's lien A mechanic's lien has been regarded as somewhat analogous to the equitable lien of a vendor for unpaid purchase money of lands sold,³⁴ but it differs from a vendor's lien in that it arises only by compliance with the statute under which it is created³⁵

Claim or statement Although the lien claim or statement is sometimes referred to as the "lien," the lien is a charge on the property arising by operation of law on the filing of a proper instrument in writing within the required time, the lien claim, statement, or account or other instrument in writing filed is not itself the lien³⁶ After it has attached, the lien is, of course, something more than a mere claim to a lien³⁷

c. Origin and Creation

A mechanic's lien is created either by a constitutional provision or by statute, and, independently of statute, it is not recognized at common law or allowed in equity

In some states a mechanic's lien has its origin and operation by constitutional provision and statutes, enacted pursuant to constitutional directions, providing for the enforcement of the lien,³⁸ and, although it has been stated that the lien is wholly a creature of the constitution,³⁹ it has also been held that a mechanic's lien so created is a creature of statute.⁴⁰ In most states, however, a mechanic's or materialman's lien, or the right to acquire and enforce such a lien, is purely a creature of statute,⁴¹ and, unless gal proceedings⁴⁷ but attaches by operation of law when a contract has been entered into and the work has been performed or the materials furnished, which adds to the value of the property.⁴⁸

Contract. While a contract with the owner for, or at least his consent to, the making of the improvement in question is necessary before a lien can be established, as discussed infra § 52, and in such a sense the lien may be said to arise out of, or to be based on, contract,⁴⁹ nevertheless the lien is created by, and arises from, statute and not by or out of contract.⁵⁰ The provisions of a contract cannot enlarge the statute⁵¹ and give a lien to a person not entitled thereto under the law,⁵² and it has been held that the lien cannot be restricted or extended by the acts of the contracting parties.⁵³ However, by agreement, independent of statute, a lien in the nature of a mechanic's lien may be reserved between the parties,⁵⁴ and may be enforced against anyone acquiring a subsequent interest with notice of such lien.⁵⁵

Civil law. Mechanics' liens on buildings and land were recognized and favored by the civilians,⁵⁶ and were clearly defined and regulated in the civil law.⁵⁷

§ 2. What Law Governs

The creation and operation of a mechanic's lien are governed by the law of the state where the real property benefited is situated.

A mechanic's lien is a creature of the law of the state where the real property, benefited by the labor or materials, is situated,⁵⁸ and that law governs the mode of its creation and operation,⁵⁹ and also the method whereby it may be continued;⁶⁰ and this rule applies although the contract for labor or materials was made in another state.⁶¹

§ 3. Constitutional and Statutory Provisions

- a. In general
- b. Constitutionality

a. In General

The theory and purpose of mechanics' lien statutes are to protect persons who contribute labor or materials to the construction, improvement, or repair of a building or other structure, thereby enhancing the value of the land, by affording them security for their compensation.

Statutes creating mechanics' liens and prescribing means for their perfection and enforcement exist in practically all, if not all, of the states,⁶² although some of the earlier statutes applied only to certain designated localities or parts of the state.⁶³ A mechanics' lien law does not create a new substantive right, but merely provides an additional means of enforcing the payment of a debt,⁶⁴ it generally provides a means for creating the lien as well as a means for enforcing it.⁶⁵ It does not affect the law of contracts or create any new contractual liability,⁶⁶ but gives a contractor a remedy for enforcing his claim in addition to, and not affecting the enforcement of, his contract rights with the property owner by common-law or equitable means.⁶⁷

The theory and purpose of statutes creating mechanics' liens are to protect, not ordinary contract creditors⁶⁸ or persons possessed of claims in tort against the contractor,⁶⁹ but persons who have, in good faith, contributed labor or material to the construction, improvement, or repair of a building or other structure,⁷⁰ thereby enhancing the value of the land,⁷¹ by according them security for their compensation⁷² independent of the account of indebtedness between the owner and the contractor.⁷³ It has been further stated that the object of the statutes is to prevent the owner of land from obtaining the labor and capital of other persons, and retaining the benefit thereof, without paying therefor.⁷⁴ The statutes are based on, and justified by, the principle that the building constructed becomes a part of the realty,⁷⁵ increasing the value thereof,⁷⁶ and that the persons who have contributed labor or material to the improvement of property are entitled to look to that property for compensation.⁷⁷

Purpose

(1) "The object and purpose of the Mechanics' Lien Law was to protect a person who, with the consent of the owner of real property, enhanced its value by furnishing materials or performing labor in its improvement, by giving him an interest therein to the extent of the value of such material or labor"—John P. Kane Co. v. Kinney, 66 N.E. 619, 174 N.Y. 69—Charles C. Kellogg & Sons Co. v. DeLia, 17 N.Y.S.2d 330, 331, 173 Misc. 156, reversed on other grounds 28 N.Y.S.2d 4, 262 App. Div. 803.

(2) The purpose of the statute is to assist the miner and laborer to recover wages—Mitchell v. Beaver Dredging Co., 8 Alaska 566.

The lien law affords complete protection to laborers and materialmen by authorizing them to file a lien against the premises guaranteeing that no money earned by the lienor will escape him—Rubinstein v. The statutes are sometimes said to be equitable in purpose,⁷⁸ or to have an equitable basis,⁷⁹ their aim and purpose being to do substantial justice between the parties,⁸⁰ by protecting the owner as well as the lienholder,⁸¹ and to accomplish what a court of equity could not do.⁸² Where the lien is conferred by constitutional provision, the existence of the lien is not dependent on compliance with any statute,⁸³ the object of statutes enacted thereafter being to supply the means of enforcing the lien conferred.⁸⁴

Extraterritorial effect. Mechanics' lien laws have no extraterritorial effect.⁸⁵ In the case of lands which have been ceded to the United States by a state for governmental uses the laws of the state apply,⁸⁶ but where a territory is carved out of a state, and there is no provision making the laws of the state applicable to the new territory, no lien can be acquired in the territory under such state laws.⁸⁷

b. Constitutionality

- (1) In general
- (2) Under constitutional provisions creating or favoring lien

(1) In General

Statutes providing for mechanics' liens have generally been upheld as valid.

The validity and constitutionality of mechanics' lien laws generally,⁸⁸ as well as the validity and constitutionality of particular provisions or features thereof,⁸⁹ have been upheld, such as a provision giving a lien to a subcontractor who has no contract with the owner,⁹⁰ or requiring an owner having knowledge of improvements to disclaim responsibility in a certain manner, and within a specified time, in order to escape liability,⁹¹ or authorizing the amendment of the lien claim or statement.⁹² Particular sections, provisions, or features of some statutes have been held unconstitutional,⁹³ such as a provision which vests a subcontractor or materialman with the right to a lien in a case where the original contractor has waived his right to a lien before the materials are furnished or the labor performed,⁹⁴ or which requires the owner to take from the contractor a bond for the benefit of subcontractors, laborers, and materialmen.⁹⁵ However, even though a part of a mechanics' lien law may be unconstitutional the remainder, if separable, may be valid.⁹⁶

A provision giving the legislature power to create a lien on buildings separate from the land has been held constitutional,⁹⁷ but there is also authority to the contrary.⁹⁸ Likewise, although there is authority to the contrary,⁹⁹ statutes conferring on mechanics' liens priority over other liens or encumbrances have been held constitutional,¹ and it has been held that the legislature may withdraw priorities which materialmen enjoy and decree equality of division of available money among liens of equal rank.² A law providing that a materialman or a subcontractor may enforce his lien without regard to the indebtedness existing between the contractor and the owner has been held constitutional,³ but there is also authority to the contrary.⁴

(2) Under Constitutional Provisions Creating or Favoring Lien

Under a constitutional provision creating or favoring mechanics' liens, the legislature may prescribe the means for protecting, perfecting, or enforcing the lien, but generally cannot limit or restrict the right to the lien.

Under constitutional provisions creating mechanics' liens, the legislature may prescribe means for protecting, perfecting, and enforcing the lien,⁵ and it may extend the right to such a lien,⁶ but it cannot deny, limit, impair, or detract from the right conferred by the constitution,⁷ such as with respect to equality between the class of persons who may be entitled to the lien⁸ or with respect to the limitation of liability of the owner to the lien claimant.⁹ A constitutional provision favoring a me-

§ 4. — Construction, Operation, and Effect in General

- a. In general
- b. Strict or liberal construction
- c. Operation and effect in general

a. In General

A mechanics' lien law should receive a fair and reasonable construction in order to effectuate the object and purpose of the statute.

In accordance with the general rules of statutory construction, as discussed in the CJS title Statutes §§ 311-386, also 59 C.J. p 943 note 29-p 1105 note 38, a mechanics' lien law should be given a fair and reasonable construction so as to effectuate the object and purpose of the statute¹² and to protect mechanics and materialmen in their claims.¹³ In making such construction the court should accept the plain language of the statute as written,¹⁴ construe the statute in its entirety,¹⁵ and construe related statutes in connection with each other;¹⁶ but a specific provision or statute will control the construction of a general provision or statute.¹⁷ The various provisions of a statute dealing with the subject of mechanics' liens will be construed as relating to all mechanics' liens,¹⁸ including liens on the property of private owners and liens on public improvements,¹⁹ except where the language of the section evidences a different intent,²⁰ or where from the nature of the subject regulations as to one class are inapplicable to the other.²¹

different states, the decisions of the courts of one state construing the statute of that state are generally not considered as of great value as precedents in construing the statute of another state.²² However, the general rule of statutory construction that, where one state adopts the statute of another, it adopts it with the construction placed on it by the highest court of judicature of the latter state is applicable where a mechanic's lien statute of one state is adopted by another state.²³ Where the construction of a local mechanics' lien law is not free from doubt, the construction given to it by courts in the locality where the act operates should have great weight with the court of last resort in construing the statute.²⁴

(1) Strict Construction

In some states it is stated as a general rule that mechanics' lien statutes must be strictly construed

In some states it is stated as a general rule that mechanics' lien statutes must be strictly construed,²⁵ on the theory that they are in derogation of the common law,²⁶ as well as opposed to,²⁷ and in derogation of,²⁸ common right. This rule of strict construction is particularly applicable where the statute is a special one, entirely local in its nature, and in abrogation of the general lien law of the state.²⁹ However, even under the rule of strict construction, the statutes must nevertheless be given a construction which is reasonable³⁰ and which will render them effectual,³¹ rather than one which will impair or nullify them³² or defeat their obvious purpose

stantial justice and equity³⁹ as to all parties concerned⁴⁰ This rule has been said to be the better doctrine and to represent the trend of more recent decisions⁴¹

A constitutional provision giving a right to assert a mechanic's lien has been held remedial in character, and therefore should be liberally construed to effect its objects and promote justice,⁴² and the right to such a lien cannot be destroyed or defeated, either by the legislature or by the courts, unless grave reasons therefor are shown.⁴³

Even where the rule of liberal construction prevails, the liberal construction should be a reasonable one;⁴⁴ the courts should not give to the statute a forced, unnatural,⁴⁵ or unfair⁴⁶ construction, nor should they extend the statute to a state of facts not fairly within its general scope and purview,⁴⁷ or create a lien under circumstances not covered by the statute,⁴⁸ or dispense entirely with certain provisions of the statute⁴⁹ The rule of liberal construction has also been held not to apply where interests other than those of the lienor and owner are involved⁵⁰

Statutory rule. Under the express provisions of some mechanics' lien statutes they must be liberally construed⁵¹ to secure the beneficial purposes thereof.⁵² However, it has been held that such provision of the statute should not be considered in determining whether a particular claim of lien is enforceable as such,⁵³ and that, notwithstanding such provision, the statute should be strictly construed with respect to the requirements on which the right to the lien depends⁵⁴ A statutory rule that a general statute in derogation of the common law shall be liberally construed to promote its object has been

(3) As Controlled by Nature of Provisions Construed

A distinction has been drawn between different provisions of the same mechanics' lien statute, some provisions being subject to a strict construction while other provisions are subject to a liberal construction.

Attempts have been made to reconcile the apparently conflicting decisions relating to the construction of mechanics' lien statutes by drawing a distinction between different provisions of the same statute and considering some parts of the statute subject to a strict construction and other parts subject to a liberal construction.⁵⁶ It has been held that provisions relating to the creation, existence, or right to the lien, being in derogation of the common law,⁵⁷ should be strictly construed,⁵⁸ but there is also authority to the contrary.⁵⁹ On the other hand, it has been held that provisions relating to the enforcement of the lien after it has once attached, being remedial in character,⁶⁰ should be liberally construed⁶¹ in favor of the persons entitled to the benefit of the lien⁶² in order to effect the object of the statutes⁶³

Provisions dealing with claim or statement. Statutory provisions relating to the form,⁶⁴ contents,⁶⁵ amendment,⁶⁶ or time for filing⁶⁷ of the claim, statement, or notice filed to perfect or preserve the lien should be liberally construed, but not so liberally as to ignore explicit directions of the provision.⁶⁸ Conversely statutory provisions should be strictly construed which require service by a materialman, on the owner, of an attested account⁶⁹ or which prescribe a forfeiture of the lien for willfully misstating matters required to be stated in the claim.⁷⁰

c. Operation and Effect in General

lien must be determined from the terms of the statute creating and defining it, and cannot be extended beyond the obvious designs and plain requirements of the statute.

Since a mechanic's lien is purely the creature of statute, as discussed supra § 1 c, the terms of the statute creating and defining it must be looked to in determining whether the lien attaches,⁷¹ the right thereto,⁷² and its character, operation, and extent,⁷³ and unless the facts bring a claimant within the terms of the statute no lien exists.⁷⁴ The lien cannot be extended beyond the obvious designs and plain requirements of the statute,⁷⁵ such as to persons or objects not embraced within the statute,⁷⁶ and the remedies provided by the statute should not be extended beyond its obvious design and clear requirements.⁷⁷ It has been held that the lien cannot be extended beyond the scope of the statute by equitable principles,⁷⁸ but, on the other hand, it has been held that the lien may be enlarged by some established equitable principle based on the maxims of equity based on right and justice,⁷⁹ and that, after the lien has attached, equitable principles will prevail to carry out the purposes of the statute⁸⁰

§ 5. — Retroactive Operation

A mechanics' lien statute is generally not retroactive in its operation.

The provisions of a mechanics' lien statute are usually held not to be retroactive unless an intent to the contrary clearly appears,⁸¹ particularly where they would be unconstitutional if held retroactive.⁸² A mechanics' lien law is usually held to apply only to labor performed or materials furnished subsequent to its taking effect,⁸³ and according to some authorities it does not apply where the contract was entered into prior to the time the statute took effect.⁸⁴ However, although there is authority to the contrary,⁸⁵ it is generally held that a mechanic's lien may be acquired under a statute passed before the work was done or the materials furnished, although the contract therefor was made before such enactment,⁸⁶ and a lien law has also been held to apply in the case of work done or materials furnished partly before and partly after it went into effect⁸⁷ except where the statute expressly provides that it shall apply only to claims wherein the work was commenced to be performed or the materials were commenced to be furnished after the date of its approval.⁸⁸ A statute requiring building contracts containing a prohibition against mechanics' liens to be filed or recorded does not apply where all the material was furnished prior to the passage of the statute.⁸⁹

Amendment of claim Statutes authorizing amendments of the lien claim are prospective in their operation,⁹⁰ and not retrospective so as to apply to claims filed before their enactment.⁹¹

§ 6. — Change or Repeal

The right to a mechanic's lien is usually determined by the statute in force at the time the work is performed or the materials are furnished; but the lien must be enforced in accordance with the law in force at the time the necessary proceedings are taken for that purpose. A repeal of the statute destroys inchoate rights thereunder unless there is a saving clause as to such rights.

The right to a mechanic's lien is usually determined by the statute in force at the time the work is done or the materials are furnished,⁹² or, according to some authorities, at the time when the contract is executed,⁹³ but the lien must be enforced by the law in force at the time the necessary proceedings are had for that purpose,⁹⁴ that is, at the time they are instituted,⁹⁵ unless there is a saving clause in the new law with respect to rights acquired under the old law,⁹⁶ as, for instance, concerning the statement for a lien,⁹⁷ or unless to require enforcement under the new remedy would infringe substantial vested rights.⁹⁸ Where, however, the right to a lien has accrued under a statute allowing a certain time in which to perfect or enforce the lien, such time will not as a rule be cut down by a subsequent statute allowing a shorter time,⁹⁹ and where the new statute extends the time for enforcement of the lien it will be held applicable.¹

Repeal. When a mechanics' lien law is repealed² or superseded,³ all inchoate rights under the old law are destroyed unless there is a saving clause as to such rights.⁴ The courts will give effect to an intent apparent in the statute to preserve or continue,⁵ rather than destroy,⁶ rights under the old law, and to allow their enforcement under the new law.⁷ Where the right has become vested, it is not affected by the repeal of the law.⁸ A general statute stating that the provisions of any statute, as far as they are the same as any prior statute, shall be construed as a continuation of such prior statute, and not as a new enactment, is applicable to reenacted provisions of a repealed mechanics' lien law.⁹

§ 7. Persons Who May Obtain Lien

Any person who is competent to make the contract which is the basis of a mechanic's lien has capacity to obtain such lien.

Generally whoever is competent to make the contract which is the basis of the lien, discussed infra §§ 56-72, has capacity to obtain a mechanic's lien.¹⁰ The term "person," as used in a statute providing for liens in favor of any person who furnishes labor or materials in the erection of any building or other improvement, is construed to mean either a natural or an artificial person.¹¹ The lien may be acquired by a partnership.¹²

Corporation. A mechanics' lien may ordinarily be acquired by a corporation, as a "person," within the meaning of the statute,¹³ and this rule applies to either a domestic¹⁴ or a foreign¹⁵ corporation. This rule has been held to apply, with respect to a foreign corporation, although it has not obtained a certificate or permit to do business within the state,¹⁶ unless such certificate or permit is expressly required by statute.¹⁷ However, a corporation organized for the purpose of manufacturing and selling lumber has been held not to be entitled to a lien for labor performed, as the act is beyond its corporate powers.¹⁸

Nonresident. Unless the benefit of the statutes is expressly restricted to residents of the state or of a particular locality,¹⁹ nonresidents as well as residents of the state may be entitled to the lien,²⁰ provided, under some statutes, they are authorized to do business within the state.²¹

Owner of property. The owner of property cannot enforce a mechanic's lien on it in favor of himself to the prejudice of third persons who hold liens on it.²² The rule has been applied by holding that a member of an unincorporated association cannot acquire a lien on the property of the association²³ which will be available as against the liens of other persons who are not members.²⁴

§ 8. Property Subject to Lien

A mechanic's lien ordinarily attaches only to privately owned property.

A mechanic's lien ordinarily attaches only to privately owned property,²⁵ as distinguished from property devoted to public use, discussed infra § 10, although it has been said that the various provisions of the law should be held to relate to all mechanics' liens affecting real property, whether public, semipublic, or private, unless the statute evinces a different intent or the nature of the subject renders regulations as to one class inapplicable to the other.²⁶ A private enterprise is subject to a mechanic's lien although its purpose is wholesome and beneficial to the public.²⁷

§ 9. — Property of Private Corporations

The property of a private corporation is subject to a mechanic's lien.

The property of a private corporation²⁸ or of a corporation which is not in fact a public or quasi-public one,²⁹ like that of an individual, is subject to a mechanic's lien.

§ 10. — Public Property

By the weight of authority, public property devoted to public use is not subject to a mechanic's lien.

Although there are some decisions to the contrary,³⁰ by the great weight of authority a public building or other public property devoted to public use is not subject to a mechanic's lien³¹ unless it is provided for by contract³² or is expressly made subject to the lien statute,³³ since it is considered, in the absence of such a provision, that property devoted to public use is by implication exempted from the operation of the lien laws.³⁴ The reasons for the rule are that a lien on such property would be contrary to public policy³⁵ and also would be unenforceable.³⁶ A public building is not brought within the operation of the mechanic's lien law by a statutory requirement of a contractor's bond for the protection of persons furnishing labor or material for state, municipal, or other public work,³⁷ or by a provision of such law that every person furnishing material to be used in the construction of "any building" shall have a lien thereon.³⁸

Lien on fund. Under some statutes the fund appropriated or set apart for the erection of a public building is not subject to a lien.³⁹ However, other statutes authorize, in the case of a public building or improvement, a lien for labor and material on the fund appropriated and due the contractor.⁴⁰

Private property acquired by public corporation, and vice versa. An existing lien on private property is not displaced or defeated by its acquisition by a public corporation,⁴¹ and after public property has been sold to an individual it may be subjected to a mechanic's lien.⁴²

§ 11. — Property of Quasi-Public Corporations

As a general rule the property of a quasi-public corporation, which is affected with a public use, is not subject to a mechanic's lien.

lien may, however, be enforced against property of a quasi-public corporation which is not essential to the carrying out of the public purposes for which it was established,⁴⁴ or property to which the lien has attached before it became impressed with a public use,⁴⁵ but as to the latter proposition there is also authority to the contrary.⁴⁶ Under the provisions of some constitutions or statutes a lien may attach to the property of a public service corporation,⁴⁷ such as a telephone company.⁴⁸

§ 12. — Property of Religious, Educational, or Charitable Organizations

Property of a religious, educational, or charitable organization may be subject to a mechanic's lien.

A mechanic's lien may attach to college buildings,⁴⁹ and, although there is at least one decision to the contrary,⁵⁰ the weight of authority sustains the view that a church building is subject to a mechanic's lien⁵¹ and is not exempted therefrom by the fact that the seats or pews are exempt⁵² or that the church is exempt from taxation.⁵³ It has also been held that a mechanic's lien may attach to an orphanage,⁵⁴ but under some statutes, if a home for the aged and infirm or an orphanage belongs to a religious society, the lien may attach only by order of court.⁵⁵ A hospital building is exempt from mechanics' liens where it is used for purely public purposes⁵⁶ even though the affairs of the hospital are administered by a charitable corporation under the regulation and control of the state.⁵⁷

§ 13. — Cemeteries and Cemetery Structures

Under some statutes monuments, gravestones, cemeteries, and cemetery structures may be the subject of mechanics' liens.

Under some statutes a mechanic's lien may attach to monuments, gravestones, and cemetery structures, and it has been held that a mechanics' lien statute not expressly mentioning a cemetery is applicable thereto.⁵⁸ On the other hand, it has also been held that, on grounds of public policy, neither lots of land in a cemetery nor any kind of monument or building erected thereon is subject to a lien under a statute not expressly mentioning them.⁵⁹

§ 14. — Homestead

Under some constitutional and statutory provisions homestead property is not subject to a mechanic's lien, but under other provisions a contrary rule obtains.

Under some constitutional and statutory provisions property held exempt from ordinary debts as a homestead is not subject to a mechanic's lien⁶⁰ except to the extent that the value of the homestead exceeds a prescribed exemption amount.⁶¹ On the other hand, under other constitutions and statutes, such homestead property is subject to a mechanic's lien the same as other property,⁶² provided there is strict compliance with the constitutional and statutory provisions relating thereto⁶³ and subject to such limitations as may be prescribed by the constitution or statute.⁶⁴ The question whether particular property is a homestead, with respect to such a lien, is generally determined as of the time of the making of the contract under which the labor was performed or the materials were furnished,⁶⁵ and, if the owner failed to disclose his intention to use the property as a homestead and permitted representations otherwise to be made, he is estopped to assert, as against a mechanic's lien claimant, that he intended to use the property as his homestead.⁶⁶

Homestead rights in public lands. Under the federal statutes providing that land acquired under the provisions of the Homestead Act cannot in any event become liable to the satisfaction of any debt or debts contracted prior to the issuing of the patent therefor, discussed in the C. J. S. title Public Lands § 233, also 50 C. J. p 1135 notes 26-29, a mechanic's lien does not attach to land acquired under the Homestead Act before the patent is issued,⁶⁷ and it has been held that a lien cannot be acquired on a building permanently attached to the soil by the homestead settler previous to the issuing of a patent,⁶⁸ but that it may be acquired on the building⁶⁹ or on machinery.⁷⁰ It has also been held that a pre-emption right is an interest in land which can be subject to a mechanic's lien.⁷¹

§ 15. Estate or Interests Subject to Lien

A mechanic's lien may attach to any right, title, or interest which the owner of the building or improvement may have in the lot or land on which it is situated.

§ 17. — Leaseholds

A leasehold estate or interest may be subject to a mechanic's lien.

A mechanic's lien may attach to, and be enforced against, a leasehold estate⁹³ for labor or materials furnished under a contract with the lessee, as discussed infra § 65, regardless of whether the lessee has an estate for years⁹⁴ or is merely a tenant from month to month⁹⁵. The lien may attach notwithstanding the buildings, fixtures, etc., put on the leased premises by the tenant may for some purposes, and under some circumstances, be considered as personal property,⁹⁶ and even though the tenant has the privilege of removing the buildings, machinery, or fixtures from the premises at the end of the term.⁹⁷ Such a lien may also attach to the interest of a sublessee, assignee, or other person holding under the lessee⁹⁸ or to the interest of the holder of the lease with an option to purchase.⁹⁹ However, a mechanic's lien on a leasehold estate attaches subject to all the terms and conditions of the lease¹ and subject to the paramount interest of the lessor or the holder of the fee.²

§ 18. — Mortgaged or Encumbered Property

A mechanic's lien may attach to a mortgagor's interest or equity of redemption in the mortgaged property prior to foreclosure.

A mechanic's lien may attach to the interest or equity of redemption of the mortgagor in mortgaged property³ prior to foreclosure.⁴ The lien, however, does not attach to the mortgagor's mere right of redemption after a foreclosure sale.⁵

is duly recorded, expressly provides that no contract creating a lien shall be made.⁷ The income of property held under a spendthrift trust is not subject to a mechanic's lien.⁸ It has also been held that a husband's interest in a lease for an unexpired term of nine hundred and ninety-nine years, owned by his wife, could not be subjected to a mechanic's lien,⁹ since the lease is merely a chattel real vesting in the husband only a life estate in trust with remainder to the wife.¹⁰

II. RIGHT TO LIEN

A. NATURE OF IMPROVEMENT

§ 20. In General

In order to establish a mechanic's lien it is usually necessary that the materials furnished or labor performed should have gone into something which has attached to, and become a part of, the realty, whether the value of the realty must have been increased depends on the statute under which the lien is claimed.

In order to establish a mechanic's lien it is usually necessary that the materials furnished or labor performed should have gone into something which has attached to and become a part of the realty.¹¹ While, under some statutory provisions, it has been held that the materials furnished or labor performed must have added substantially to the value of the realty,¹² under other statutory provisions questions of benefit to the owner of the property¹³ or of the enhancement or increase in the value of the property¹⁴ have been held immaterial.

§ 21. Buildings or Structures and Improvements in General

a. In general

b. Particular property

a. In General

(1) In general

(2) Improvements

(1) In General

The nature of the building, structure, or improvement for which a mechanic's lien may be acquired depends entirely on the terms of the particular statute under which the lien is claimed.

The nature of the building, structure, or improvement for which a mechanic's lien may be acquired depends entirely on the terms of the particular statute under which the lien is claimed. Thus a mechanic's lien may be conferred for the performance of services, as discussed infra §§ 34-39, or for the furnishing of materials, discussed infra §§ 40-44, in the erection or construction, discussed infra § 22, alteration, addition, or repair, discussed infra § 23, of certain buildings, structures, or improvements specifically mentioned,¹⁵ or any building,¹⁶ structure,¹⁷ or improvement,¹⁸ depending on the particular statutory provisions involved.

A "building," within the meaning of mechanics' lien laws, has been held to be an edifice constructed for use or convenience, as a house, church, shop, etc, attached to, and becoming part of, the land.¹⁹ It has been held not to include every species of erection on land,²⁰ such as fences, gates, or other like structures.²¹ An "appurtenance," as used in a statute allowing a lien for materials furnished or services rendered in the construction of a building or any of its appurtenances, has been held to cover what might not otherwise be deemed to belong to the building.²²

The fact that a building is erected, or an addition is made thereto, for the purpose of being put to an unlawful use has been held not to prevent a person furnishing labor or material therefor from acquiring a mechanic's lien²³ unless he had knowledge, at the time, of the intended use.²⁴ However, it has also been held that one furnishing materials to another to be used on certain realty is charged with knowledge of the existing zoning regulations relative to such realty and may not assert a lien based on such person's violation of the ordinances in building a structure with such materials,²⁵ since the one furnishing the materials is not excused from inquiring into what use is to be made of the materials and the legality of such use.²⁶

"Structure." The meaning of the word "structure," as used in a statute authorizing a lien for labor performed or materials furnished in connection with the creation, improvement, or repair of a structure, is to be ascertained by referring to the meaning of the words associated with it,²⁷ and where all the associated terms designate classes of property attached or appurtenant to, or a part of, the land, the word "structure" is to be likewise restricted,²⁸ notwithstanding it may be susceptible of other definitions.²⁹ Under some statutory provisions the meaning of the words "structure" and "property" has been held to be the same.³⁰

"Other structure." The words "other structure," following an enumeration of particular things in mechanics' lien acts, have been held to include all objects built on the soil, which are property within the constitution, having permanency and put in place to accomplish some definite purpose,³¹ and to comprehend all the properties specifically enumerated,³² and any similar thing constructed, should the enumeration prove incomplete.³³ However, the words have been held to include only objects similar to the preceding objects specifically named,³⁴ and not to embrace matters not resembling, related to, or belonging in, the same class with the structures or improvements specifically enumerated.³⁵

(2) Improvements

Where statutory provisions relating to mechanics' liens do not expressly define the term "improvement," there is a conflict of authority as to its meaning.

Some statutory provisions expressly define the term "improvement."³⁶ However, where the statutes do not define the term the courts are not in accord as to its meaning. Thus it has been held that the term is synonymous with "building,"³⁷ or means an entire building or independent erection³⁸ or such a permanent and substantial erection as essentially augments the interest which a tenant has in the lands.³⁹ On the other hand, it has been held that the term is not necessarily synonymous with, or restricted to, buildings,⁴⁰ and that it may not include even an ordinary dwelling house where the words with which it is associated exclude such a construction.⁴¹ In order to support a mechanic's lien, under some statutory provisions, it has been held that the work or materials furnished must permanently improve the land affected.⁴² As discussed infra § 23, there is a conflict of authority on the question whether the term includes additions.

"Other improvements." It has been held that the expression "other improvements," refers only to improvements of a character similar to those previously mentioned.⁴³

Improvements on homestead. Under some constitutional provisions a lien may be allowed for an improvement made on a homestead.⁴⁴ Although it has been held that the improvements for which a lien may be allowed need not be made on a residence used as a home,⁴⁵ they must be of a nature not inconsistent with homestead use.⁴⁶ Marking off and grading part of a homestead and erecting a dwelling house thereon constitutes an improvement of the homestead for which mechanics' liens may be allowed.⁴⁷

- (6) Other property

(1) Mining and Railroad Property

Mining or railroad property has been held to come within the meaning of some general mechanics' lien statutes relating to structures and improvements.

A mine has been held to be a structure⁴⁸ or improvement⁴⁹ within the meaning of general mechanics' lien statutes relating thereto. Also a smelter has been held to be a mill or manufactory within the meaning of a statute giving a lien for the erection or improvement of such structures.⁵⁰ In some,⁵¹ but not other,⁵² jurisdictions a mechanic's lien has been allowed in respect of a railroad, while in still other jurisdictions it has been allowed in respect of some,⁵³ but not other,⁵⁴ railroad property. Thus a railway tunnel has been held to be a structure within the meaning of a general mechanics' lien statute.⁵⁵

(2) Oil, Gas, Steam, or Electrical Property

Oil, gas, steam, or electrical property has been held to be a structure or improvement within some general mechanics' lien statutes.

A gas plant is such an improvement as will give rise to a mechanic's lien under some statutes.⁵⁶ Also the statutes include a plant for the generation of steam to be distributed under a municipal franchise.

through pipes laid in the streets⁵⁷ Electric light or power lines, including poles, wires, and insulators, have been held within some statutes relating to mechanic's liens for structures or improvements, etc.,⁵⁸ but not within other statutes⁵⁹

Various statutes have been held to include an oil well derrick or oil rig⁶⁰ and an oil refinery.⁶¹ An oil tank has been held to be within a statute relating to erections and improvements,⁶² but not within one relating to buildings.⁶³

(3) Fences and Windmills

While fences and windmills may come within the provisions of some mechanics' lien statutes, such property may not be within the contemplation of other statutes.

In some jurisdictions mechanics' liens may be acquired for the construction of fences,⁶⁴ at least when constructed as appurtenant to a building,⁶⁵ and at the same time⁶⁶ or when included with a building in the same contract.⁶⁷ However, it has been held otherwise under a statute giving a lien merely for labor or materials furnished for erecting or repairing any "building or the appurtenances of any building."⁶⁸ A mechanic's lien has been allowed for a windmill on the ground that it is an "improvement"⁶⁹ or an "appurtenance"⁷⁰ within the meaning of the statutes.

(4) Flumes, Aqueducts, Dams, and Bridges

The provisions of the statute under which a mechanic's lien is claimed determine whether a lien will be allowed for flumes, aqueducts, dams, or bridges.

Mechanics' liens have been allowed for aqueducts,⁷¹ flumes,⁷² and dams.⁷³ Some statutes do not confer a lien for the construction of an irrigation system as such,⁷⁴ but only for the construction of the specific structures comprising it.⁷⁵ It has been held that a mechanic's lien may not be acquired for a bridge as a building⁷⁶ or wharf.⁷⁷ However, some statutes have expressly created a lien on account of bridges,⁷⁸ and have been construed to extend to railroad bridges.⁷⁹

(5) Wharves, Piers, and Vessels

Mechanics' liens are allowed with respect to wharves, piers, or vessels under some statutes.

A general mechanics' lien law has been held not to comprehend vessels,⁸⁰ since, as discussed in Maritime Liens § 5, there are other statutes specifically relating to liens on vessels. However, under some statutory provisions, a mechanic's lien may be acquired for a wharf,⁸¹ a wharf boat,⁸² and sheds erected on piers.⁸³ It has been both affirmed⁸⁴ and denied⁸⁵ that a lien may be acquired on account of a floating wharf or dock under a statute relating to "buildings."

(6) Other Property

Whether various kinds of property constitute structures or improvements, etc., depends on the statutory provisions under which the lien is claimed.

The mechanics' lien statutes have been held to include, among other things,⁸⁶ an aerial tramway,⁸⁷ an ice house,⁸⁸ a structure intended for the shelter, use, and convenience of a professional baseball club, its agents, players, and patrons,⁸⁹ and an amphitheater and framework built on posts firmly imbedded in the soil.⁹⁰

On the other hand, lien statutes have been held not to include a coke oven⁹¹ or swings and seats erected in a fair ground and park.⁹² A kiln has been held not to be within a statute relating to buildings,⁹³ but, of course, it is within a statute expressly naming it.⁹⁴ Some statutory provisions have been held not to include a mausoleum,⁹⁵ but, under other statutory provisions, a lien may be allowed on the premises where a mausoleum is situated for the placing of stained glass windows in the mausoleum.⁹⁶

A "public improvement" has been held to include a schoolhouse⁹⁷ and an ice plant.⁹⁸

Mills and factories. A lien usually may be acquired for labor performed in, or materials furnished for, the construction of mills and factories,⁹⁹ the statutes in some states expressly mentioning such structures.¹

Lightning rods. It has been held in some jurisdictions that a lien may attach for labor and materials used in the construction and erection of lightning rods,² but such a lien has been denied in other jurisdictions,³ and, as discussed infra § 314, in still other jurisdictions it has been held to be a question of fact, to be determined by the jury, whether a lightning rod was furnished "in and about the erection and construction" of a house, so as to give rise to a lien.

§ 22. — Erection or Construction

- a. In general
- b. Commencement or completion of building

a. In General

What constitutes a construction or erection under statutes requiring that an improvement be a construction or erection in order that a lien may be allowed therefor may be determined by whether or not a new, or substantially new, building has been put up.

Under some statutory provisions a lien may be acquired on property for the construction of a building thereon.⁴ What constitutes construction or erection under statutes which do not confer a lien for repair or alteration, so that there can be no lien unless the improvement in question falls under the head of construction or erection, may be determined by whether or not a new building has been put up,⁵ or, in the case of remodeling, rebuilding, or alterations, whether the old building has lost its identity,⁶ or whether the structure of the building has been so completely changed that it may properly be termed a new building or a rebuilding,⁷ even though some portion of the old materials may remain in it⁸

While the adaption of an old structure or other improvement to a new or distinct use which effects a material change in the interior or exterior thereof has been held a construction or erection thereof,⁹ a mere change of purpose of the building is not a proper test of the difference between an old and a new building¹⁰ Under some constitutional provisions the labor and materials furnished must have gone into the "making,"¹¹ or, as discussed infra § 23, "repairing" of the building or article for which the lien is claimed.

Additions to a building may come within a statute relating to erection or construction,¹² provided the additions are substantial¹³ Work which is in substance that of new construction after a fire is not prevented from constituting erection or construction by the fact that a comparatively small part of the work, if standing by itself, would properly be classed as repairs,¹⁴ it being proper to consider such work as a part of the construction of the building or plant as an entirety¹⁵ Painting a house has been considered a part of the work of finishing and erecting it.¹⁶

ing is actually completed, but on whether the construction is commenced.

The right to a lien for work done in the construction of a building is not dependent on whether the building is actually completed,¹⁷ but on whether the construction is commenced.¹⁸ If this is done and lienable work is done in aid thereof, the right to a lien thereby becomes perfect¹⁹ and may not thereafter be defeated by any act of the proprietor.²⁰ It has also been held that a right to a lien may exist, although, owing to the fault of the owner in abandoning the project, there has been no actual beginning of the improvement.²¹ The erection of a brick house, complete in so far as the brick work is concerned, is an improvement on the premises within the meaning of a statute giving a lien therefor.²²

§ 23. — Repairs, Alterations, and Additions

Under some statutes a lien may be acquired for repairs, alterations, or additions to a building.

Under some of the statutes providing for mechanics' liens, such a lien may be acquired for repairs²³ or alterations,²⁴ but under others no lien may be acquired for any repairs to,²⁵ or alterations in,²⁶ an old building. Under some statutory provisions a mechanic's lien may not be acquired for repairs to a building unless such repairs amount to one fourth of the entire value of the building.²⁷ Under some constitutional provisions, the labor and materials furnished must have gone into the "making," as discussed supra § 22, or "repairing" of the building or article for which the lien is claimed.²⁸

A mechanic's lien for additions may be acquired under a statute expressly allowing it.²⁹ A lien for additions may be acquired under a statute relating to improvements,³⁰ but the contrary has also been held.³¹ It has been held that the term "improvement," within the meaning of a mechanic's lien statute, is used in the sense of an addition to property rather than in the restricted sense of improvement by repair.³² Further, a statute relating to improvements has been held not applicable to temporary and insignificant additions.³³

§ 24. — Removal or Destruction

Under some statutes a mechanic's lien may be acquired for moving or tearing down a building or a part thereof.

Under some statutes a mechanic's lien may be acquired for moving a building,³⁴ but under other statutes a lien will not be allowed.³⁵ While it has been held, under a statute allowing a lien for the "removal of any building," that a lien may be acquired for tearing down a building or a part thereof and hauling it away,³⁶ ordinarily no lien arises for simply tearing down or wrecking and removing a building or a part thereof.³⁷ However, while there is some authority to the contrary,³⁸ it has been held that where improvements for which a lien can properly be obtained are made, and the work of tearing down old structures or parts thereof, and removing the debris, is a necessary part of the making of the improvements, such work may be included in the lien,³⁹ and that the lien may also attach where under the contract the old material is to be used to erect a new building.⁴⁰

§ 25. — Excavations and Foundations

The right to a mechanic's lien for an excavation usually depends on the purpose for which it was made, and excavations and foundations for a building or other improvement may give rise to a lien although the building is not completed.

Ordinarily the right to a lien for an excavation depends on the purpose for which it was made.⁴¹ Excavations and foundations for a building⁴² or other improvement⁴³ may give rise to a lien even though the building is not completed⁴⁴ or even though the project is abandoned and no superstructure is erected,⁴⁵ but as to the latter proposition

there is also authority to the contrary.⁴⁶ An excavation for a building, made in violation of an ordinance requiring a building permit by one who knows such permit is required, does not give rise to a lien therefor.⁴⁷ An excavation made other than for the purpose of making an improvement on the land,⁴⁸ such as one made solely for exploration purposes,⁴⁹ does not give rise to a lien. (1) It has been held that a lien may be acquired for improvements

ditions which a tenant may remove during his tenancy or at the expiration thereof⁵⁶ However, where no rights of a tenant are involved, it has been held that the doctrine of trade fixtures may not be invoked as against a claimant otherwise entitled to a lien⁵⁷ Rules governing fixtures generally have been held applicable in determining whether any particular article of personalty has become a fixture⁵⁸

Partitions placed in a building to make it suitable for a different use have been held to constitute an improvement and not a repair so as to be lienable within a mechanics' lien statute allowing liens for improvements⁵⁹ A lien has been denied for the taking down of fixtures, and putting them up in another store⁶⁰ Also the cutting, removal, and storage of pipe to be used later in the same building when removed to another lot is not lienable as work on a new building subsequently begun on the old site⁶¹ Papering or decorating a house may be lienable as an "improvement" of the building.⁶²

Doors, windows, and mirrors. A mechanic's lien has been allowed for window frames,⁶³ sash,⁶⁴ and glass,⁶⁵ as well as for window and door screens manufactured for, and fitted to, a building,⁶⁶ but not for window shades.⁶⁷ Doors, placed in a building to make it suitable for a different use, have been held to be an improvement and not a repair, so as to be lienable under a mechanics' lien statute allowing liens for improvements⁶⁸ A lien may exist for enhancing the value of a leasehold, whether or not such improvements are trade fixtures—Rathel v Hamilton-Schmidt Surgical Co, App. 48 S W 3d 79

§ 27. — Apparatus for Heating, Cooking, Lighting, or Water Supply

- a. Heating or cooking
- b. Lighting
- c. Water supply

a. Heating or Cooking

Ordinarily a mechanic's lien may be allowed for furnaces, heaters, stoves, ranges, or other equipment for heating or cooking purposes where they are installed in a house or other building and attached thereto with the intention of making them a part of the building.

Although there is some authority to the contrary,⁷² ordinarily a mechanic's lien may properly be claimed for furnaces, heaters, stoves, ranges, or other equipment for heating or cooking purposes where they are installed in a house or other building and attached thereto with the intention of making them a part of the building.⁷³ Thus it has been held that gas ranges installed in apartments and connected with a fixture placed therein are fixtures for which a lien may be allowed,⁷⁴ and the fact that the ranges can easily be disconnected and are of a general design has been held not to disprove their character as lienable fixtures⁷⁵ However, it has also been held that a gas range connected with the realty by a gas supply pipe is not a lienable fixture,⁷⁶ and that portable stoves, ranges, or heaters are not within the lien laws,⁷⁷ even though furnished during the construction of the building⁷⁸ or provided for in the original contract.⁷⁹

A lien may not be allowed for furnishing a furnace where the transaction was merely a sale of a furnace as personal property⁸⁰ or where it is not so attached to the realty as to lose its character as movable personal property.⁸¹ A lien has been denied for a cover for a stovepipe flue.⁸² A steam sterilizer, attached to a building but easily removable therefrom, has been held not to constitute a fixture for which a lien may be allowed.⁸³ Connections furnished for heating equipment have been held not to be subject to a lien unless such connections were intended to become part of the premises.⁸⁴

Mechanics' liens have been allowed for lighting equipment installed in a building, but the authorities differ as to whether a lien may be allowed for the installation of lighting fixtures, such as globes, chandeliers, etc.

A mechanic's lien has been allowed for a gas machine,⁸⁵ electric wires,⁸⁶ conduits,⁸⁷ and switches⁸⁸ installed in a building, and for an electric sign attached to a theater.⁸⁹ While it has been held that a mechanic's lien is not allowable for the installation of gas or electric lighting fixtures, such as globes, chandeliers, etc.,⁹⁰ it has also been held that a lien may be allowed for such fixtures.⁹¹ Fluorescent fixtures furnished for the use of a house have been held to constitute materials of a sort which may be the subject of a lien,⁹² but electric bulbs have been held not the proper subject of a lien⁹³ A lien for furnishing materials in providing a hotel with an electric lighting plant has been held not allowable under some statutes.⁹⁴ A lien may not be allowed for wires, lights, and appliances for lighting which constitute removable trade fixtures.⁹⁵

c. Water Supply

Generally a mechanic's lien may be allowed for certain property or articles built or installed in a building for the purpose of facilitating the acquisition, storage, and use of water.

The property or articles built or installed in a house or building for the purpose of facilitating the acquisition, storage, and use of water for which a mechanic's lien may be acquired have been held to include plumbing appliances and fixtures,⁹⁶ water and sewer pipes,⁹⁷ tanks and reservoirs,⁹⁸ pumps,⁹⁹ sinks and bathtubs,¹ and laundry apparatus.² However, it has been held that a lien may not be acquired for plumbing and drain connections unless such connections were intended to become a part of the premises.³ While a lien may not be acquired for fire apparatus, such as valves, hoses, and racks, which, although attached to a building, are easily detachable therefrom without damage to the structure,⁴ a lien may be acquired where such apparatus was attached to the building with the intent that it become a permanent part thereof.⁵ It has further been held that a lien may be acquired for a fire-extinguishing sprinkler system which is immovable and merged with a building.⁶

§ 28. — Machinery

While there is no lien for machinery where the transaction by which it was furnished was merely an ordinary sale of personalty, under some statutes a lien may be allowed for machinery provided it is stationary and firmly attached to the realty so as to become a part thereof.

While there is no lien for machinery where the transaction by which it was furnished was merely an ordinary sale of personalty,⁷ and under some statutory provisions a lien may not attach for furnishing machinery,⁸ under other statutes a lien may be allowed for machinery,⁹ provided, as a general rule, the machinery is stationary and firmly attached to the realty so as to become a part thereof,¹⁰ or, in other words, provided it has become a fixture.¹¹ However, it has been held that where an article constitutes a part of a plant or machinery necessary to the operation of the whole,¹² or its use is essential to the operation of some part of the machinery which is physically attached to the freehold,¹³ it may be classed as a fixture subject to a lien even though it lacks permanent attachment to the realty, and under some statutes a mechanic's lien may be allowed although the machinery is not intended to become affixed permanently to the freehold and is not technically a fixture.¹⁴

Some statutory provisions have been held not to confer a lien for carding machines,¹⁵ or iron castings, denominated as "sill castings" or "channels"¹⁶ Electric fans, fastened to the walls of a building so as to be removable without injury to the structure, have been held to be trade fixtures which do not form an integral part of the realty so as to subject the realty to a lien,¹⁷ and the fact that the fans were a necessity for the business has been held insufficient to subject the building to a lien for them.¹⁸ It has been held that a mechanic's lien may attach for furnishing engines¹⁹ and boilers.²⁰ However, under some provisions no lien may be had for a claim relating to the installation of an engine in a building.²¹

Completion or erection of building. Under some statutes a lien has been held to attach for machinery purchased for and placed in a building, regardless of whether the building is already completed or is being erected at the time of the purchase of the machinery,²² but under other statutes it has been held that there is no lien for placing machinery in a building already erected.²³

Removal or repairs. A lien may be acquired for repairs on a boiler constituting part of the realty.²⁴ However, in order to authorize a mechanic's lien for repairs of machinery, such repairs must be in the nature of fixtures,²⁵ and not small parts of a machine which are constantly wearing out and have to be replaced.²⁶ A lien has been denied for removing a portable engine.²⁷

§ 29. — Theater Fixtures

A mechanic's lien may be allowed for theater fixtures made from special designs to harmonize with the interior construction and decoration of the building.

A mechanic's lien may be allowed for theater fixtures made from special designs to harmonize with the interior construction and decoration of the building.²⁸ While it has been held that a mechanic's lien may properly be claimed in respect of the curtain, scenery, and stage fittings of a theater,²⁹ there is some authority to the contrary.³⁰ A lien may be allowed for the stationary chairs or seats in a theater,³¹ an electric sign for a theater, as discussed supra § 27, and a vacuum cleaner, operated by electricity and consisting of certain parts permanently attached to a theater.³² However, carpeting installed in a theater has been held not to constitute the basis for a mechanic's lien.³³

Even though specially manufactured, with quality and color to harmonize with the general scheme of the lien is claimed³⁴ Thus it has been held that an improvement outside a building is not lienable under a statute relating to a building or appurtenances of a building³⁵ unless it is appurtenant to the building.³⁶

Grading, cultivating, and planting. While a lien may be denied under some statutes for filling, grading, or sodding,³⁷ and a grade has been held not to be a building or article within a provision allowing a lien for making or repairing a building or article,³⁸ under other statutes a lien may be allowed,³⁹ at least in certain cases⁴⁰ A lien for breaking land for cultivation has been denied under a statute relating to improvements,⁴¹ but a lien has been allowed for grading and leveling land, where it constitutes a permanent improvement and so changes the surface of the ground that it can be irrigated.⁴²

While it has been held that a mechanic's lien may be acquired for the planting and setting out of hedges, flowers, trees, vines, and shrubbery, under a statute giving a lien for improvements,⁴³ the contrary has also been held.⁴⁴ The planting and setting out of hedges, flowers, trees, vines, and shrubbery has been held not to authorize a lien under a statute relating to the construction or erection of a building,⁴⁵ but in construing a mechanics' lien act it has been held that the word "erection" is broad enough, when construed in connection with the context of the act, to entitle one planting shrubs and trees and making a lawn to a lien for such improvements.⁴⁶ Under a statute relating to the construction, alteration, or repair of buildings or improvements, it has been held that a lien may not be acquired for the cultivation and care of land set out in trees.⁴⁷ It has also been held that a lien may not be acquired for labor performed in cultivating and caring for an orchard or vineyard under a statute relating to grading, filling, or improving land.⁴⁸

b. Wells, Ditches, Pipes, Pumps, Dredging, and Draining

Whether a mechanic's lien may be acquired for wells, ditches, pipes, pumps, dredging, or draining depends on the statutory and constitutional provisions under which the lien is claimed.

In some jurisdictions a lien for constructing wells is expressly given by statute.⁴⁹ In jurisdictions where no express lien is given the decisions are not uniform, it being held in some jurisdictions that a lien exists⁵⁰ and in others that it does not.⁵¹ In a jurisdiction where a statutory lien may be acquired for drilling an oil well it has been held that no constitutional lien may be acquired therefor.⁵² This lack of uniformity exists even in jurisdictions where the statutes are identical or similar, it being variously held that a well constitutes⁵³ or does not constitute⁵⁴ an "improvement" within the meaning of a statute, or that it is⁵⁵ or is not⁵⁶ an "appurtenance" to a building. A water well has been held to be a "structure" under a statute giving a lien for the performance of labor on a structure, or the furnishing of materials to be used in the construction of a structure.⁵⁷

Ditches, pipes, pumps, and dredging. While a ditch may not fall within the general terms of a mechanics' lien statute,⁵⁸ and canals which are merely ditches have been held not to constitute a structure within a statute allowing a lien for a structure,⁵⁹ a lien may, of course, be acquired for a ditch where it is expressly mentioned in the statute.⁶⁰ A mechanic's lien may be acquired for labor performed or materials furnished outside a building in laying or connecting pipes leading into a dwelling, plant, or factory.⁶¹ However, where piping and a pump do not bear some relation, or are not appurtenant, to a structure or building, no lien may be acquired therefor.⁶² Where the statute so provides, a person who dredges for a riparian proprietor may have a lien.⁶³ It has been held that one dredging and filling in submerged or marsh lands for the owner thereof may acquire a lien on such land,⁶⁴ but not for draining land.⁶⁵

§ 31. — Roads, Walks, and Street Improvements

A mechanic's lien may be acquired for the construction of walks and some street improvements under statutory or constitutional provisions in some jurisdictions.

Under some statutory provisions a mechanic's lien may not be acquired for the construction of a road,⁶⁶ or for the construction of sidewalks⁶⁷ or such other street improvements as paving,⁶⁸ curbing,⁶⁹ and grading⁷⁰ a street, unless such improvement in the street is connected with an improvement on the lot or tract of land.⁷¹ However, under other statutory and constitutional provisions, a lien may be allowed for sidewalks⁷² and streets,⁷³ as distinguished from public roads and highways.⁷⁴ Under some statutory provisions a mechanic's lien may be acquired for the construction of sewers,⁷⁵ and it has been held that a mechanic's lien may be acquired for the construction of a sewer in connection with houses.⁷⁶ However, a lien may not be acquired for the installation of sewer lines and water mains under a constitutional provision allowing a mechanic's lien for "erecting a building, or making or repairing an article."⁷⁷ A lien has been allowed for the construction of walks appurtenant to a building,⁷⁸ and for the laying out and surfacing of roads,⁷⁹ as well as the paving of a plaza,⁸⁰ in a cemetery. However, a lien for a stone driveway has been denied.⁸¹

§ 32. — Storage or Removal of Ashes and Refuse

A lien has been denied for the construction of receptacles designed for the reception and temporary deposit of ashes and garbage and to be placed on the ground in the rear of a house

A lien has been denied for the construction of boxes or receptacles designed for the reception and temporary deposit of ashes and garbage and to be placed on the ground, and not attached thereto, in the rear of a house.⁸²

B. SERVICES RENDERED AND MATERIALS FURNISHED, AND AMOUNT OF CLAIM

§ 33. In General

The right to a mechanic's lien must be predicated on a valid and subsisting claim of a kind contemplated by the mechanics' lien statutes.

The right to a mechanic's lien must be predicated on a valid claim⁸³ of a kind contemplated by the statute⁸⁴. There must be something due the person claiming the lien,⁸⁵ or, in other words, the relation of debtor and creditor must exist,⁸⁶ or there must be such an existing right to compensation or payment⁸⁷ as would entitle the claimant to a personal judgment for the amount due.⁸⁸

As discussed infra § 34, all the mechanics' lien statutes confer a lien for work or labor performed or services rendered, and, as discussed infra § 40, practically all confer a lien for materials furnished; but as a rule they confer a lien only for labor or materials⁸⁹. A right to a mechanic's lien may not arise where an act subsequent to the furnishing of the labor and materials,⁹⁰ and not the furnishing of the labor and materials,⁹¹ creates the indebtedness. A lien may not be had as security in favor of one who lends his credit to another to enable him to purchase materials.⁹² Under some constitutional and statutory provisions, a lien for labor, or for labor and material together, but not for material alone, may be acquired against a homestead,⁹³ and under such provisions a lien on a homestead under a contract for labor and material is valid as to all work done and materials furnished after the execution of the contract.⁹⁴

§ 34. Services

All mechanics' lien statutes confer a lien for work, labor, or services; but, in order that a lien may be acquired, the labor must be of such a nature as to come within the meaning of the statutory or constitutional provision under which the lien is claimed.

All mechanics' lien statutes confer a lien for work, labor, or services.⁹⁵ However, in order that a lien may be acquired for work, labor, or services, they must be of such a nature as to come within the meaning of the statutory or constitutional provision under which the lien is claimed,⁹⁶ they must be done, performed, bestowed, or furnished accordingly as the statute may provide.⁹⁷ Further, they must be performed in the construction, erection, etc., of the building, structure, or improvement as provided in the statute,⁹⁸ and they must be such as are reasonably included in the contract between the owner and the contractor.⁹⁹ A mechanics' lien statute has been held to extend to the use of equipment where the lien is for labor and the tools or equipment are instrumentalities in the performance of labor,¹ and the use of tools and machines, controlled by workmen, rendering their labor on a building or other structure more effective and valuable than it would be if performed with their hands alone, has been held not to defeat a claim for a lien for labor in the operation of such machines.² The cost or expense of transporting a workman to and from his place of work is a lienable item where it is involved in his employment and is a part of his compensation.³

Furnishing labor. While a lien for labor furnished has been denied,⁴ as under statutes conferring a lien for labor done,⁵ it has also been allowed,⁶ as under statutes expressly allowing a lien for labor furnished⁷ or under statutes allowing a

§ 35. — Preparatory Work in General

Under a contract for materials only, a lien may not be had for labor performed in preparing or manufacturing the materials as a claim for "labor," a lien may be allowed to a contractor for planning the work of reconstructing a building

Where a materialman contracts to deliver material in prepared or manufactured form, the contract is for materials only, and a lien may not be had for labor performed in preparing or manufacturing the materials as a claim for "labor."¹⁰ A contractor for the reconstruction of a building has been held to be entitled to a lien for his services in planning the work of repairing and reconstructing the building.¹¹

§ 36. — Services of Architect

Under many statutes an architect who prepares plans and specifications for a building or otherwise performs the ordinary duties of his profession may acquire a mechanic's lien for his services; but there is also authority holding otherwise.

An architect who prepares plans and specifications for a building or otherwise performs with respect thereto the ordinary duties of his profession may acquire a mechanic's lien for his services under many statutes.¹² While architects may acquire a lien for their services under statutes expressly so providing,¹³ as well as under statutes conferring a lien for work, labor, or services,¹⁴ under other statutes an architect has no lienable claim for the services rendered by him¹⁵ as work and labor "on" a building.¹⁶

An architect who merely furnishes plans, drawings, and specifications may acquire a lien for his services,¹⁷ but in some cases the proposition has been doubted or left undetermined,¹⁸ and it has also been held that an architect is not entitled to a lien for such services.¹⁹ Under many statutes a lien may be allowed to architects who furnish plans and also superintend the construction,²⁰ but it has also

In a statute providing that every architect and engineer performing any work and labor on any building may have a lien on the property on which the work is done, the terms "architect" and "engineer" are not used qualitatively to mean that the actual labor must have been done on the premises and on the very structure being erected but the term contemplates services as they are usually performed—Caird Engineering Works v Seven-Up Gold Mining Co., 111 P 2d 267, 111 Mont 471

been held that, although an architect's services consist of both furnishing plans for a building and superintending its construction in accordance therewith, he may be entitled to a lien only for the superintendence and not for the plans,²¹ and it has further been held that such an architect does not come within a mechanic's lien statute and may not acquire a lien for his services.²²

Under statutory provisions whereby an architect may not acquire a lien for preparing plans and specifications, it has been held that he is not entitled to any lien under an entire and indivisible contract for preparing plans and superintending construction.²³ However, although an architect may not acquire a lien merely for preparing plans and specifications, where he both furnishes the plans and specifications and superintends the construction, he may be entitled to a lien for both services, where the contract for his services is indivisible.²⁴ It has been held that no lien may be had for services rendered by engineers in designing machinery or plants for installation in buildings where they do not become part of the buildings on which the lien is claimed.²⁵

Use of plans and specifications. An architect may acquire a lien for his services where his plans and specifications are used in the construction of a building.²⁶ While there is some authority holding that he may acquire a lien even though his plans and specifications are not used,²⁷ ordinarily no lien may be allowed for plans and specifications not used.²⁸ An architect may not be entitled to a lien for preparing plans and specifications for a building actually constructed on a different plan, after the plans for which the lien is claimed had been actually abandoned,²⁹ but, where the fundamental principles of architects' plans are used in the construction of a building, the fact that the identical plans are not used has been held not to deprive the architects of their lien.³⁰

§ 37. — Superintendence

A mechanic's lien may be acquired for services in superintending the construction of a building or other improvement in some jurisdictions.

§ 38. — Work Other than Construction

Ordinarily a mechanic's lien may not be acquired for work other than construction, under the statutes

Ordinarily a lien may not be acquired for work other than construction, under the statutes,³⁷ and, where the labor for which a lien is claimed is only remotely and indirectly connected with the construction work, no lien may be allowed.³⁸

§ 39. — Work Not Done on Premises

The work or labor for which a mechanic's lien may be acquired need not be performed on the premises where the building or structure is being erected or the improvement is being made, provided it is necessarily connected with the construction or improvement.

It is not essential that the work or labor for which a lien may properly be claimed should be performed on the premises where the building or structure is being erected or the improvement is being made,³⁹ provided it is necessarily connected with the construction or improvement on the premises.⁴⁰ Thus work done in the workshop or yard of the contractor, in fitting materials for use in the building, is labor or work performed in the erection of the building.⁴¹

Lien on homestead

Under some constitutional and statutory provisions mechanic's lien against homestead, executed by husband and wife to cover materials furnished for construction of home on lot, has been held valid—Granmar v Hesperian Bldg & Sav Ass'n, Tex.

formed in the erection or alteration of buildings or other improvements, no lien can be had for materials furnished for an improvement.⁴³

§ 41. — Nature, Quality, and Quantity

The nature, quality, and quantity of the materials furnished for which a lien may be acquired depends on the statute under which the lien is claimed and on the terms of the contract.

The mechanics' lien statutes do not expressly define the kind of material entering into the construction of a building which shall be covered by their provisions.⁴⁴ Where the term is qualified by the words, for the "erection, building, construction, alteration, or repair" of any building or other improvement, it has a restricted meaning,⁴⁵ depending on the construction of the words quoted.⁴⁶ It has been stated generally that the right to a lien for materials furnished extends to all such materials as ordinarily enter into, or are used in the construction, repair, or improvement of, buildings, etc.,⁴⁷ and which are within the express or implied terms of the building contract.⁴⁸

Provided it is within, and conforms to the terms of, the contract, the material for which a lien may properly be claimed need not be in any precise state,⁴⁹ it may be raw or crude material⁵⁰ or perfectly adapted to the purposes intended.⁵¹ A lien may be acquired for materials ordered by the owner and complying with the contract regardless of whether or not they are fit for the purpose intended.⁵² However, a breach of guaranty prevents the acquisition of a lien by a party to the contract.⁵³ A lien may be acquired for materials which were defective when, after being repaired, they were accepted by the owner.⁵⁴ A materialman may not acquire a lien for all the materials he may choose to furnish on the credit of the building,⁵⁵ but only for such as are reasonably necessary⁵⁶ in view of the size and apparent character of the building.⁵⁷

Building or parts thereof as materials. One who has sold a portion of an old house and moved it to another lot, putting it on a foundation constructed by the buyer, has been held entitled to a lien as for material furnished.⁵⁸ So too, where one agreed to put upon a lot a small frame house already constructed, and to make additions thereto, it has been held that, by regarding this house as material going to the construction of the whole, it might be covered by the statute,⁵⁹ although, if considered as a building already constructed, it could not be.⁶⁰ It has also been held that where, after an old building was partly repaired by plaintiff, it was torn down, and a new one erected by him in its stead, he may claim a lien on the new building for materials furnished for, and used in, the old building which were afterward used in the new.⁶¹

a. In General

In order that there may be a lien for materials they must have been actually furnished to the person designated in the statute under which the lien is claimed.

In order that there may be a lien for materials it is necessary that they shall have been actually furnished⁶² to the owner or contractor or other person designated in the statute under which the lien is claimed.⁶³ A mere purchase of, or contract for, materials is not sufficient,⁶⁴ nor may a person who has retaken materials claim at the same time that he has furnished them⁶⁵ To furnish materials, within the meaning of a mechanics' lien statute, ordinarily means to sell⁶⁶ and deliver⁶⁷ or supply or provide⁶⁸ them for use in making the improvement or the erection of the building, as discussed infra § 45.

It has been held that title to the materials need not pass to the owner of the building in order that a lien may be allowed therefor⁶⁹ Under some circumstances materials may be regarded as "furnished," so that a lien therefor may exist, where they are prepared and ready for delivery,⁷⁰ as where they are especially designed and manufactured for the particular building⁷¹ under a contract directly with the owner⁷² and the latter refuses to accept or receive them⁷³ It has been held that, where the materials furnished were actually used in the building in question, it is immaterial what agency performed the physical act of delivery.⁷⁴

b. Place

While it has been held that materials may be furnished so as to give rise to a lien therefor, although they are not delivered on or near the premises where the building is being erected or the improvement is being made, there is some authority to the contrary.

While there is some authority holding that, to furnish materials for a building within the meaning of a mechanics' lien statute, there must be a delivery at or near the building,⁷⁵ and it has been held that materials are not furnished within the meaning of such a statute when delivered from point of shipment,⁷⁶ it has generally been held that materials may be furnished so as to give rise to a lien therefor, even though they are not delivered on or near the premises where the building is being erected or the improvement is being made⁷⁷ This has been held to be true where the materials are actually used in the construction of the building,⁷⁸ and according to some,⁷⁹ but not other,⁸⁰ authorities a mechanic's lien may exist under some circumstances for materials which are neither delivered on the premises nor actually used in the construction of the building While there is some authority to the contrary,⁸¹ it has been held that a mechanic's lien may be acquired for materials delivered and furnished outside the state⁸²

§ 43. — Actual Use

While under the statutes in many jurisdictions materials furnished must have been actually used in the construction of the building or the making of the improvement in question, under some statutes this rule does not obtain.

Under the statutes in many jurisdictions it is a general rule that it is essential to the acquisition of a lien for materials that the materials furnished shall have been actually used in the construction of the building or the making of the improvement in question.⁸³ The rule should not be enforced with such rigidity as to work injustice,⁸⁴ it being sufficient to show with reasonable certainty that the material furnished was actually used in the construction of the building in question.⁸⁵ Under the statutes in some jurisdictions this rule does not obtain,⁸⁶ although, of course, even in these jurisdictions, a lien may not exist, under the circumstances in some cases, for materials which are not used in the construction of the building in question.⁸⁷ However, where materials are delivered pursuant to contract, and the building is completed and there is nothing to show that the materials were not used therein, and it is shown that some of the materials entered into its construction, it may be concluded that the materials did in fact go into the building and a lien may be allowed therefor.⁸⁸

cumstances under which a lien may be allowed for materials which are not actually used.⁸⁹ It has been held that, where materials are delivered in good faith to be incorporated in a building, a lien may be acquired therefor, even though they have not been used for the purpose for which they were ordered,⁹⁰ and it has further been held that a seller of material, acting in good faith, who delivers it to the situs where such material is intended to be and should be used, is not required to follow the transaction to the ultimate end of seeing that such material is actually so used or consumed as a condition precedent to the efficacy of his lien.⁹¹ Thus it has been held that a lien may be acquired for materials where they have been prepared or furnished as ordered and the owner refuses to accept or use them,⁹² goes into bankruptcy,⁹³ allows his property,

The rule that one may acquire a lien for materials actually delivered on the property, although they are subsequently used in another building, has been held to have no application where the one furnishing the materials agrees, prior to such delivery, that any material remaining over and not used in the building shall be returned to him or used in another job, and after the building is constructed the unused material is sorted and checked over and used elsewhere—Boyer-Van Kuran Lumber & Coal Co. v. In Texas

(1) Under some statutory provisions it has been held that a lien may be acquired for materials furnished although such materials are not actually used in the construction of a building or structure—W. L. MacAttee & Sons v. House, 153 S W 2d 460, 137 Tex 259—Trammell v. Mount, 4 S W 377, 68 Tex. 210, 2 Am. S R 479

while unfinished, to go into the hands of a receiver,⁹⁴ diverts the materials to other uses⁹⁵ or to another building or structure,⁹⁶ or otherwise appropriates them without the consent of the furnisher.⁹⁷

Similarly one who delivers material to an owner's contractor on the premises may be entitled to a lien therefor although the material is diverted to another project by the contractor.⁹⁸ Also it has been held that a lien may be acquired for materials specially fabricated for inclusion, but not installed in a building, where such materials are being held awaiting the instructions of the owner,⁹⁹ and that subcontractors who furnish materials specially designed and made for a building are not deprived of their lien if the contractor suspends work.¹ So too the fact that material purchased by a contracting company for the construction of a line of electric railroad under authority given by the railroad company, as provided by the contract, had not been used at the time the contract was terminated by the railroad company has been held not to affect the right to a lien therefor.² However, one who delivers material specially designed for a particular structure and who, at the time of delivery knows that the material will not be used in the construction of the building, is not entitled to a lien therefor.³

Provided they were furnished for use in the construction of the building or the making of the improvement in question, as discussed infra § 45, and the portion which entered into the construction or improvement can be shown,⁴ it has been held that a lien may be had for such materials as actually entered into the construction or improvement in question, even though other materials furnished by the same person were not so used.⁵ Where materials furnished to a subcontractor are actually placed in the building for which they were furnished, the materialman has been held entitled to a lien, notwithstanding the subcontractor fraudulently disposed of the materials to a third person by whom they were placed in the building.⁶ A lien may exist for materials which were once used in the construction of a building, even though they were subsequently removed or taken out.⁷

§ 44. — Incorporation in Building or Improvement

Where the materials, although used in construction, do not become a constituent part of the building, structure, or improvement, it has been held that ordinarily no lien may be acquired therefor; but this rule is not applicable in all jurisdictions regardless of the circumstances of particular cases.

The word "material," as used in mechanics' lien statutes, has been held to be something which enters into, becomes a part of, and remains with, the completed work or the finished structure.⁸ A lien may properly be asserted for materials which become a part of the structure or improvement,⁹ but where the materials, although used in construction, do not become a constituent part of the building, structure, or improvement, it has been held that, unless they come within an express statutory exception,¹⁰ no lien may be acquired therefor,¹¹ and that real property is not to be subjected to a lien for materials which do not enter into the construction of some improvement which becomes a part thereof.¹² However, it is unsafe to accept this as a general rule applicable in all jurisdictions regardless of the circumstances of particular cases.¹³

Ordinarily, unless expressly so provided by statute,¹⁴ no lien may be acquired for the value or use of tools, machinery, equipment, or appliances furnished or lent for the purposes of facilitating the work,¹⁵ where they remain the property of the contractor¹⁶ and are not consumed in their use,¹⁷ but remain capable of use in other construction or improvement work.¹⁸ While charges for parts entering into incidental repairs of equipment, made during the continuance of construction work, have been held to be lienable, whether or not consumed on the job,¹⁹ it has also been held that the use of tools and machines which wear out in the use does not give a right to a lien for their value as materials.²⁰ So too a lien has been denied for other materials which remain the property of the contractor,²¹ such as patterns²² and materials furnished for a temporary bridge to be used during the construction of a permanent bridge.²³

Generally a lien may be acquired for materials which, although not incorporated in the building or improvement, are used in the construction and, by their use, are actually or practically consumed, wasted, destroyed, or rendered worthless or unfit for further use.²⁴ Thus a lien has been allowed for explosives,²⁵ and, although there is some authority to the contrary,²⁶ for lumber and other materials furnished and used in making forms or molds to hold and support concrete until it hardens and becomes self-supporting.²⁷ While a lien has been allowed regardless of the salvage value of the lumber so used,²⁸ it has also been held that, where the lumber is removed and remains fit for use in the construction of other buildings, no lien may be acquired therefor.²⁹ A lien has been allowed for materials entering into a cofferdam.³⁰ A claim for feed sold to a contractor to be used in feeding teams employed in construction on, or improvement of, realty has been held not to be lienable.³¹

Shoring and scaffolding. While a lien has been denied for lumber used for scaffolding,³² it has also been held that a lien may be allowed for such portion of the lumber as is entirely consumed and cannot be used again,³³ or that a lien may be allowed although the lumber was not wholly consumed,³⁴ the lien, in such case, being allowed for the depreciation in value of such portion as is not entirely consumed but has become depreciated in value.³⁵ A like rule has been applied in determining the existence and amount of a lien for lumber used as shoring.³⁶

Fuel and oil. There is a conflict of authority on the question whether a lien may be acquired for coal or other fuel used to generate power for the operation of the machinery by which the construction or improvement work is carried on, so that, while it has been held that it may be acquired,³⁷ it has also been held that it may not be acquired.³⁸ There is a like conflict of authority on the question whether oil, grease, or other lubricant is lienable, some courts having held that it is lienable³⁹ and others that it is not lienable.⁴⁰

Packages and shelter. It has been held that, where material is usually delivered in certain packages, it is proper to charge for it as packaged,⁴¹ although the small material constituting the package does not literally go into the construction of the building.⁴² Thus it has been held that including a charge for lime barrels⁴³ or cement sacks⁴⁴ is proper where they are not returned. A lien has been allowed for materials furnished for the construction of a tool house,⁴⁵ but not for the construction of shelter for the workmen and animals of a contractor or subcontractor,⁴⁶ or for the construction of sheds for the protection of materials.⁴⁷

Under statute relating to public improvements

§ 45. Intent or Purpose in Furnishing

In order that a lien may be acquired, the labor and materials must be furnished for the purposes contemplated by the statute under which the lien is claimed, usually statutes allowing a lien for materials furnished apply only to materials furnished for building purposes

In order that a lien may be acquired, the labor and materials must be furnished for the purposes contemplated by the statute under which the lien is claimed.⁴⁸ The statutes allowing a lien for materials furnished usually apply only to furnishing for building purposes,⁴⁹ and do not include a furnishing for general⁵⁰ or unknown⁵¹ purposes, or an ordinary sale in the usual course of trade⁵² or on a general or open account,⁵³ or a sale without any reference as to what shall be done with the material sold.⁵⁴ It has been held that, while the materials must be furnished for building purposes as distinguished from general or unknown purposes, still it is not essential that any particular building should be in the contemplation of the parties at the time the materials are sold.⁵⁵ However, the weight of authority is to the effect that it is essential that the materials shall have been sold or furnished for the purpose of being used in the particular building on which a lien is claimed,⁵⁶ although, where the materials are sold for the purpose of building a house, the fact that the materialman did not know the exact location of the land upon which the building was to be erected will not defeat the lien.⁵⁷

It has been held that one who furnishes material with knowledge that it may be used on several different jobs is not entitled to a lien against the structure in which the material is used.⁵⁸ However, it has also been held that, when labor or materials are furnished to a contractor engaged in the construction of several buildings for different owners, each building with the lot on which it stands may be subjected to a lien for materials used in, or labor expended on, it,⁵⁹ even though, according to some,⁶⁰ but not other,⁶¹ authorities, the labor and materials were furnished indiscriminately for use in the construction of the several buildings. When materials are furnished as ordered, and there is no special contract for the furnishing of all the materials to be used in the erection of several buildings, a lien against a particular building may not be acquired, after its sale, by the furnishing of materials to be used in the other buildings.⁶²

§ 46. Reliance on Credit of Building or Property

Usually, in order that a mechanic's lien may be acquired, the labor must have been performed, or the materials furnished, on the credit of the particular building, and not merely on the general credit of the owner, contractor, or other person.

In order that a mechanic's lien may be acquired, usually it is necessary that the labor shall have been performed, or the materials furnished, on the credit of the building,⁶³ and not merely on the general and personal credit of the owner, contractor, or

"Credit of the building"

The phrase "credit of the building" has been held to be a statutory phrase used in mechanics' lien laws, referring to labor or material furnished for a particular structure, but extended to include within its meaning skilled labor, where the mechanic did not know into what building the

some other person⁶⁴ However, it has been held that, where materials are furnished for use in a particular building a lien may be had therefor, although at the time of sale the materialman intended to rely for payment solely on the personal credit of the buyer.⁶⁵ At any rate, the mere fact that the materialman looks to the contractor in the first instance, and, if he fails, to the building, will not defeat the lien.⁶⁶ Also the materialman need not, at the time of furnishing the materials, expressly state his intention of relying on his right to a lien.⁶⁷

§ 47. Advances of Money

A mechanic's lien ordinarily may not be acquired for money lent or advanced to a contractor or other person to enable him to purchase material for, or pay for labor upon, a building or other improvement.

There may be no mechanic's lien for money lent or advanced to a contractor or other person for the purpose of enabling him to purchase material for, or pay for labor upon, a building or other improvement.⁶⁸ One who lends money to an owner to enable him to procure a loan on his property is not entitled to a lien therefor.⁶⁹ However, a lien against a homestead, executed by a husband and wife, covering money advanced for improvements and payment of a vendor's lien, has been held valid.⁷⁰

§ 48. Board and Lodging

While it has been held that a mechanic's lien may not be acquired for board or lodging of workmen, it has also been held that a lien for board may be allowed as part of the compensation due under a contract.

It has been held that a mechanic's lien may not properly be claimed in respect of board or lodging⁷¹ of a foreman⁷² or of workmen,⁷³ either in respect of the food furnished⁷⁴ or of the services rendered in cooking.⁷⁵ However, it has also been held that a lien for board may be allowed as part of the compensation due under a contract.⁷⁶ Under a statute allowing a lien for provisions, goods, or supplies furnished, it has been held that a lien may be allowed for groceries furnished to a subcontractor for the maintenance of a boarding house for his men,⁷⁷ but not for supplies consumed by men not working on the job in question.⁷⁸

§ 49. Profits and Commissions

Profits and commissions ordinarily are not lienable items unless included in the contract price or in the reasonable worth of the labor or materials furnished, no lien may be allowed for profits or commissions not earned

Profits and commissions ordinarily are not lienable items⁷⁹ unless included in the contract price,⁸⁰ as where the contract provides for payment of the cost of, or reimbursement for the amount actually paid out for, labor and material, plus a certain per cent as commissions, profit, or compensation,⁸¹ or unless included in the reasonable worth of the labor or materials furnished,⁸² as where the actual cost is less than the reasonable worth.⁸³ There also is authority holding that a lien is regulated by the amount and value of the work done, and not by any supposed profits contracted for.⁸⁴ No lien may be allowed for profits or commissions not earned,⁸⁵ as on labor not done or material not furnished,⁸⁶ or on that portion of the contract which is not completed.⁸⁷

§ 50. Transportation

A mechanic's lien is frequently allowed for the transportation of material.

While a lien for the transportation of material has in some instances been denied,⁸⁸ as where there is no agreement to pay a hauling charge,⁸⁹ frequently it has been allowed,⁹⁰ sometimes as labor performed in the erection or construction of a building⁹¹ and sometimes as part of the value, cost, or price of the material.⁹² Under some statutory provisions no lien may be allowed for the transportation of material where the person claiming the lien is merely engaged to haul materials.⁹³ Although it has been held that gasoline and oil used in vehicles for hauling materials are not "materials furnished" within the meaning of a mechanics' lien law,⁹⁴ it has also been held that a lien is allowable for their cost as "debts contracted" for work done for or about a building.⁹⁵

§ 51. Requisite Amount or Value

Under some statutes mechanics' liens may be acquired only for claims exceeding a specified amount, but under other statutes a lien may be allowed irrespective of the amount of the claim.

amount,⁹⁶ but under other statutes a lien may be allowed irrespective of the amount of the claim.⁹⁷ It has been held that no lien may be allowed for materials of uncertain value or amount.⁹⁸

C. CONTRACT WITH, OR CONSENT OF, OWNER

§ 52. Necessity and Effect

As a general rule, in order that a mechanic's lien may be acquired for improvements on realty, the owner must, in law or in fact, authorize the improvement, or be estopped to deny such authorization.

As a general rule, in order that a mechanic's lien may be acquired for improvements on realty, the owner must, in law or in fact, authorize the improvement, or be estopped to deny such authorization.⁹⁹ Such a lien may not be acquired against the property of an owner who had no knowledge of the improvement,¹ or, under some statutes, had no knowledge that the lien claimant furnished the materials used.² Mere knowledge of the improvement, in the absence of statute providing otherwise, will not subject the owner's title or interest to a lien for labor or material used in its construction,³ nor is it alone sufficient to enable a claimant to acquire a lien that the work done or material furnished enhances the value of the property.⁴ Under some statutes, however, the owner's consent is not required to authorize a lien for alterations or repairs whenever the total cost thereof exceeds a specified amount.⁵

A mechanic's lien may be acquired for materials furnished or labor performed pursuant to a contract with the owner of the property or interest sought to be charged or his agent or statutory representative,⁶ although not under circumstances other than those contemplated by the statutes.⁷ Also, such a lien may be established where, subsequent to the performance of the work or the furnishing of materials, the owner ratifies the contract and acknowledges liability therefor.⁸ Under various statutes, some of which expressly so provide, a contract with the owner or his agent or other designated representative is essential to the establishment of such a lien.⁹

(1) A lien on a homestead may be given in a contract providing for the work and material—Lippencott v York, 34 S W. 275, 86 Tex 276 or to the establishment of such a lien against a homestead¹⁰ or the land of a married woman,¹¹ or where the claimant is in privity with the owner.¹² A contract with the owner has been held essential to the establishment of a mechanics' lien under some statutes not expressly providing therefor, such as statutes providing that the labor shall be performed or the materials furnished at the instance¹³ or request¹⁴ of the owner. Under some statutes, if a claim for a lien is not timely filed, a contract is essential to its acquisition.¹⁵

A contract, however, is not essential under all statutes to the acquisition of a mechanic's lien.¹⁶ Under varying statutes it may be acquired generally, or except as to specified property where a contract is expressly required, where the improvement is made at the instance,¹⁷ or request,¹⁸ or by the au-

After contractor's abandonment of contract

Owner is personally liable and his property is subject to liens for labor and materials furnished on his personal order after he took over management of the work on the builder's abandonment of the construction—Christian v. Bremer, 34 SE 2d 40, 199 Ga. 285.

thority,¹⁹ or with the consent,²⁰ of the owner or his agent or statutory representative, or, where the improvement is placed on the premises under contract, with one the owner has authorized or knowingly permitted to improve the property.²¹

Contractual provision against lien A provision in the contract against filing mechanic's liens, which is coupled with a promise to obtain a loan on the completed improvement to be used to pay for it, will not prevent a lien from being acquired where the owner, with knowledge that the loan could not be obtained, permitted the improvement to be constructed.²²

Personal liability. It has been held that it is not necessary, in order to constitute the consent contemplated by statute, that the owner shall have entered into an agreement or contract, express or implied, to pay or become personally liable for the work done or materials furnished,²³ although there is also some authority to the contrary.²⁴ Personal liability on a mechanic's lien generally is discussed infra § 263.

The claimant's right to a lien extends to extras subsequently ordered under the express terms of the contract or as an incident to the whole enterprise, but not where the contract provisions do not cover, or preclude, extras, or where the owner did not order or otherwise authorize them.

As a general rule extras subsequently ordered will be covered by the lien where the contract is for a building generally,²⁵ or for specifically listed items,²⁶ and the extras are an incident merely of the whole enterprise and material to its completion²⁷ and not wholly outside of the contract,²⁸ and particularly where provision for extras is made in the original contract²⁹ or in an extension or modification thereof.³⁰ The lien will not cover extras, however, where there is no contract provision covering the extra work or material,³¹ or where there is such a provision, but conditions attached thereto have not been complied with³² or waived.³³ Furthermore, under some statutes, a lien on a homestead has been held not to extend to extras and additions ordered by the husband without the written consent of the wife, and which materially increase the cost of the improvements.³⁴

A mechanic's lien will not be allowed for unliquidated damages for breach of contract.

A mechanic's lien will not be allowed for unliquidated damages for breach of contract.³⁶ Thus, there is no lien for damages sustained by the contractor by reason of a breach of the contract by the owner,³⁷ or damages of protest on an acceptance given for work and labor.³⁸ Neither is a subcontractor entitled to a lien for damages and expense incurred through idleness,³⁹ or because of work made necessary by the default or negligence of the principal contractor,⁴⁰ or for breach of contract on his part.⁴¹

It has been held, however, that a mechanic's lien may be acquired for damages arising from misrepresentation as to the value of property constituting part of the consideration to be paid for the improvement, since in such case the damages are liquidated and certain.⁴² Also, it has been held that, where a contract for a public improvement provides for reimbursement of the contractor for loss sustained by him by reason of the failure of the other party to comply with certain provisions of the contract, so-called damages which are in fact due the contractor as reimbursements in accordance with provisions of the contract are money due the contractor under the contract, within the meaning of a statute allowing a lien on the money due the contractor under the contract.⁴³

§ 55. — Subsequent Marriage or Death of Owner

A claimant's right to a mechanic's lien for improvements made on the property of another is not affected by the subsequent marriage or death of the owner.

The death of the owner of the property, with whom the contract for an improvement was made, does not affect the right of lien claimants to perfect and enforce their liens.⁴⁴ Also, where a feme sole contracts for improvements on her lands, her subsequent marriage before the improvements are completed does not in any way affect the mechanics' liens therefor.⁴⁵

§ 55. Who May Contract or Consent

Only such persons as are within the provisions of the statute can subject property to a mechanic's lien under contracts for its improvement.

Since mechanics' liens for materials furnished or labor performed in the improvement of property exist purely by virtue of statutes, as discussed supra § 1, only such persons as are within the provisions of the statute can subject property to such a lien under contracts for its improvement.⁴⁶ Likewise, since, as discussed supra § 1, the lien is a mere incident to the legal liability to pay the debt, it is necessary that the contracting owner should have the capacity to make a valid contract.⁴⁷ The power of an owner to make contracts is not exhausted when he has entered into an agreement with one person which contains a covenant against liens,⁴⁸ he may make new contracts with other persons.⁴⁹

As a general rule, in order that a mechanic's lien may be established, the contract, consent, authorization, or request pursuant to which the materials were furnished or labor was performed must have been made with or by the owner of the property or interest sought to be charged.

In general, in order that a mechanic's lien may be established, the contract, consent, authorization, or request pursuant to which the materials were furnished or labor was performed must have been made with or by the owner of the property or interest sought to be charged,⁵⁰ or, as discussed infra § 59, his agent or authorized representative. Such person must have some kind of ownership,⁵¹ and ordinarily he must have some estate or interest in the land,⁵² which ownership must exist at the time the contract, consent, authorization, or request was entered into or made,⁵³ and at the time the lien attached,⁵⁴ that is, a mechanic's lien on land cannot be acquired under a contract with, or at the instance, request, authorization, or consent of, a person who, at the time thereof, has no right, title, or interest in the land and who does not act with the consent of or as the agent of the true owner.⁵⁵ It has been held immaterial that he subsequently acquires title to the property.⁵⁶ However, under statutes providing therefor a lien may be acquired for materials furnished or labor performed in the improvement of property for one who acquired title to the realty subsequent to the commencement of the improvement,⁵⁷ or the making of the contract for the improvement with the owner,⁵⁸ or the execution of a mechanic's lien contract,⁵⁹ and under some statutes a lien may be acquired on the building or improvement under a contract with a person who is the owner of the building or improvement, but has no legal title to the land⁶⁰ In the absence of actual or constructive notice of a change therein a lien claimant is entitled to rely on the title as it stood at the time the contract for the improvement was made⁶¹ A lien may be acquired for materials purchased by the owner of realty in the name of a third person for use in the improvement of his property.⁶²

The owner of one of several adjoining lots cannot, in the absence of any agency, so contract as to charge the other lots with a lien,⁶³ or so as to charge his own lot with a lien for work done on the adjoining lots.⁶⁴ However, persons owning two or more lots in severalty may make a joint contract for the erection of buildings on the lots,⁶⁵ and, where

Statutory definitions of the term "owner," as used in mechanics' lien statutes, are controlling,⁶⁷ although in determining who are owners the term is given a broad meaning⁶⁸ Under some statutes an owner is a person who has any estate⁶⁹ or interest⁷⁰ in the property which is assignable, transferable, or conveyable,⁷¹ and which the court may order sold,⁷² or it has been held that he must have some interest, either legal or equitable, which may be enforced in the courts.⁷³ While a person who has a fee simple estate is an owner,⁷⁴ the term also includes a lesser estate,⁷⁵ a person need not be the absolute owner⁷⁶ or own a fee in the land⁷⁷ in order to be an owner within the meaning of the statutes.

It is sometimes declared generally that the owner of either the legal title⁷⁸ or that the owner of the equitable title⁷⁹ is within the statute. Also, the word "owner" has been held to mean the party in interest who is the source of authority for the improvement.⁸⁰

Legal title to the land on which a mechanic's lien is claimed is not necessarily conclusive of the right to a lien on such land, or on a structure which has been constructed thereon,⁸¹ a contract with the holder of the mere legal title cannot give rise to a lien where the equitable owner is in open, visible, and exclusive possession,⁸² and a naked equitable right, which might be enforced in equity, to reinvest the grantor with the title which had passed, does not constitute him the owner within the statute.⁸³

Person benefited by improvement. In the absence of a statute so providing, the mere fact that an owner's property was benefited by the labor performed or materials supplied will not entitle claimant to a lien thereon.⁸⁴ However, under statutes so providing, the word "owner" includes every person for whose immediate use or benefit the building, erection, or improvement is made.⁸⁵ Some courts, construing such statutes in connection with other statutes, deem an owner to be a person who owns an interest in the land and for whose immediate use and benefit the improvement is made,⁸⁶ although,

where the statute also requires the owner to have capacity to contract, it has been held that the test of ownership is contractual capacity rather than actual enjoyment.⁸⁷ It has also been held that the purpose of the statute is to enlarge⁸⁸ rather than limit⁸⁹ the ordinary definition of the word "owner." Under the latter construction a person who owns both the building and the fee is an owner regardless of whether or not the improvement is made for his immediate benefit.⁹⁰

Notice and inquiry. A person contracting to furnish labor or materials for the improvement of property is charged with the duty of ascertaining the existence, nature, and extent of the title or interest, if any, of the person with whom he contracts.⁹¹ He is bound to take notice and is charged with knowledge of matters shown by the public records,⁹² and is put on inquiry by the fact that the title to the property is not in the name of the party making the contract,⁹³ or by knowledge that, although in possession, he is not the owner of the premises.⁹⁴ On the other hand, in the absence of knowledge or notice, the lien claimant is entitled to rely on the record title.⁹⁵ A lien claimant is not precluded from asserting a lien against property by negligence in failing to ascertain its true legal status where, although the owner did not own it at the time of the contract for the materials, he promised to pay for the materials and had an interest in the building from the beginning, and thereafter acquired title to the land⁹⁶

Estoppel. Where a contract for an improvement on land is made with one who has no interest or only a partial interest, in the land but who fraudulently represents that he is the owner, or has an interest therein, and the true owner stands by and connives at the representation of such person, the true owner will be estopped to assert his ownership so as to defeat the mechanics' liens claimed for such improvement.⁹⁷ However, in the absence of statutory provision to the contrary an estoppel does not result from mere knowledge by the owner of the making of the improvement, not accompanied by any concealment or deceit on his part,⁹⁸ or from the mere fact that his property was bettered by the improvement.⁹⁹ A claimant is not entitled to a lien on the ground of estoppel where he had notice from the public records that the person with whom he contracted,¹ or that the principal of an agent with whom he contracted² was not the owner.

§ 58. — Possession

Lien claimants must take notice of the rights of persons in possession, but ordinarily mere possession is not of itself sufficient to enable one to subject realty to a mechanic's lien.

Persons about to furnish labor or materials for the making of an improvement on real estate must take notice of the rights of persons in possession,³ and the extent of their interest.⁴ However, possession of land is not necessarily conclusive of the right to a lien thereon.⁵ A lien does not arise under a contract for improvements with an occupant of land who has no interest therein and no authority from the owner to contract for improvements.⁶ Hence, a lien does not arise under a contract with a person wrongfully or fraudulently in possession;⁷ and the weight of authority supports the view that the mere fact that a person is in lawful possession and control of land does not give him authority to subject it to a mechanic's lien.⁸ However, in some cases mere possession has been held to involve such right and interest as makes the possessor an owner within the Mechanics' Lien Law, so that the lien attaches to such interest and possession and right of possession if such right exists.⁹ A mere momentary seizure is not sufficient to support a mechanic's lien.¹⁰

Actual or constructive possession. Where the person making the contract has some estate in the land and is in constructive possession, his estate can

To take charge for period of years

A contract between an owner and his agent under which the agent takes charge of the property, collects rents, and repairs and maintains it over a period of years is not such a contract as will enable the agent to obtain a mechanic's lien for materials furnished and labor performed in the improvement, alteration, or repair of the property—Lewis v. Red, supra.

contract, it has been held that the lien cannot be defeated because the amount is in excess of his authority.²⁰

The agency may be express or implied.²¹ Where the owner clothes the agent with apparent or ostensible authority, this may be equivalent to express authority, as far as it concerns the rights of persons dealing with the agent in good faith.²² Written authority is not required unless the statute so provides.²³ A person may be the agent of the owner, to an extent sufficient to bind the real estate for improvements thereon, although his acts may not bind the owner personally.²⁴

Ratification. Where a person acting without authority or in excess of his authority assumes to contract as agent of the owner of land for its improvement, a ratification by the owner of such person's act will subject the land to the mechanic's lien.²⁵ However, unless authorized by statute,²⁶ a lien cannot be established on the basis of the owner's ratification of the acts of one who in obtaining the improvements acted solely for himself and not as agent,²⁷ since it is necessary in order for ratification to exist that the person purport to act as agent of the owner.²⁸ The owner's retention of the improvement with knowledge of the facts has been held to operate as a ratification of the purported agent's acts,²⁹ but retention of the improvement will not result in ratification if the improvement cannot be removed without substantial injury to the owner's property.³⁰

Estoppel. The owner is estopped to deny the agency where, without repudiating it, he stands by and expressly consents to, or silently acquiesces in, contracts for improvements entered into with a person who claims to be his agent.³¹ Also, the owner may, under the circumstances of the case, be estopped to deny the authority of his agent to enter into the contract.³² or subscribers prior to its incorporation or by its president and sole stockholder after its dissolution by expiration of its charter.

A private corporation as owner of its property may contract for its improvement so as to subject the property to a mechanic's lien arising out of the making of the improvement,³³ and it cannot defeat the lien on the ground that its contract for the improvement was ultra vires.³⁴ However, the fact that the corporation making the contract has an interest as stockholder in another corporation does not render the property of the latter corporation subject to a lien.³⁵

Where the promoters or subscribers of a proposed corporation enter into a contract for the improvement of land to be acquired and conveyed to the corporation when formed, mechanics' liens have been held to attach to the property so conveyed to the corporation and on which the improvement is made,³⁶ even though no personal liability attaches to the corporation to pay for the improvement.³⁷ If the property on which the improvement was made was owned by any or all of the promoters at the time the contract for the improvement thereon was made, and was by them conveyed to the corporation, the mechanic's lien will undoubtedly attach,³⁸ unless the promoter owning the land is the lien claimant.³⁹ However, in some cases the courts have refused to enforce a mechanic's lien for the improvement where the promoters or subscribers did not own any interest in the land at the time the contract was entered into, and the land was not acquired by them and conveyed to the corporation, and where their contract was several, each being liable for only the amount of stock for which he subscribed.⁴⁰ Where a deed to a corporation was delivered before the corporation came into existence and hence did not vest title in it, as discussed in Corporations § 127, a contract with one of the subscribers in whom the legal title vests is a contract with the owner within the meaning of the mechanics' lien statutes.⁴¹

Contract after dissolution. A mechanic's lien on the property of a solvent corporation may arise under a contract entered into in its name by its president and sole stockholder without actual knowledge that the charter of the corporation has expired by operation of law,⁴² and the contract may be upheld on the theory that he is a statutory trustee in charge of a defunct corporation.⁴³

§ 61. — Guardians, Executors, Administrators, or Receivers

A guardian, executor, or administrator, ordinarily does not have such ownership of the property held in his official capacity as will enable mechanics' liens to be acquired thereon for materials furnished or labor performed in its improvement under contract with him, or at his request, or with his consent.

In the absence of some provision in the will whereby title to the real estate is vested in the executor or administrator, he has no authority, without an order of court, to contract for the improvement of his decedent's real estate so as to subject it to mechanics' liens therefor.⁴⁴ It has been held that an executor or administrator is neither an owner of the property⁴⁵ nor an agent of the heirs⁴⁶ within the meaning of the statutes relating to mechanics' liens, but other authority has held that executors authorized by the will of the testator to manage and control the property, with power to sell, borrow money, execute mortgages, and to dispose of and execute deeds are owners within a mechanic's lien statute, even though they cannot of their own discretion subject the property to a lien for improvements thereon.⁴⁷ The administrator of a partnership estate cannot contract in the name of the

§ 62. — Heir or Widow

An heir has sufficient ownership after the death of his ancestor to subject his interest in the ancestor's property to a mechanic's lien; but an heir before the death of his ancestor and a widow before dower is assigned have been held not to have sufficient ownership to support a mechanic's lien.

A widow, before dower is assigned,⁵¹ or an heir before the death of his ancestor,⁵² does not have sufficient ownership to support a mechanic's lien, but, after the death of the ancestor, an heir has such an interest in the property as to be an owner within the meaning of a mechanics' lien statute,⁵³ even though the estate is in the course of administration.⁵⁴

§ 63. — Husband or Wife

- a. In general
- b. Homestead property

a. In General

A mechanic's lien may be acquired on property owned jointly by husband and wife under a contract with both spouses, but, in the absence of express statutory authorization, such a lien cannot be acquired thereon under a contract with one spouse, unless the other spouse authorized, consented to, or ratified the contract. A mechanic's lien may be acquired on community property under a contract with the husband.

In the absence of a statute to the contrary,⁵⁵ a contract with one spouse is not a sufficient basis for a mechanic's lien on property owned jointly by husband and wife,⁵⁶ including land held by them as tenants by the entirety,⁵⁷ or as joint purchasers under an executory contract to purchase.⁵⁸

A lien may arise, however, under a contract with one spouse where the other spouse has authorized

Construction by agent

Husband's authorization for tenant to erect buildings or ratification of tenant's agency to do so, after completion of the buildings, is insufficient to bind wife so as to subject property held by the entireties to a lien for the improvement—Cochran v. Johnston, Mo App, 25 S.W.2d 130 Debt against both

In order that the lien may be valid it must appear that the contract for the improvement purported to make both husband and wife debtors—Blenard v. Blenard, 45 A.2d 385, 185 Md 548.

Knowledge of title

Where prior to making of contract husband and wife were owners and seized in fee as tenants by entirety, the lien claimant was held either to have had actual knowledge or to be charged with constructive knowledge of state of title of property when he entered into contract—Wilson v. Fower, 155 S.W.2d 502, 236 Mo App 532

Judicially separated spouses

or consented to the contract,⁵⁹ or ratified it,⁶⁰ or has had knowledge of the contract and the improvement and stood by without objection,⁶¹ or has dealt actively with the person furnishing the labor and material and assisted in raising funds for the doing or completion of the work,⁶² and such a lien may attach to property held by husband and wife as tenants by the entirety where the contract is made or indebtedness incurred by both spouses.⁶³ Mere knowledge on the part of the wife that a building or other improvement is being erected on the property and passive acquiescence therein on her part,⁶⁴ or such a participation in the matter as is merely a proper display of wifely interest therein,⁶⁵ is insufficient to enable a lien to be acquired thereon.

Lien against interest of one spouse in property held jointly. It has been held that a husband, by his contract, can subject to a mechanic's lien his interest in property held jointly by husband and wife.⁶⁶ Other authority, however, has held that the husband cannot, by his contract, alone, subject his interest in property held by the entirety to a mechanic's lien.⁶⁷

Community property. The husband, where community property is in his control, as considered in Husband and Wife § 506, can subject it to a mechanic's lien for improvements.⁶⁸

b. Homestead Property

A lien on a homestead for improvements thereon may arise under a contract with the spouse owning the property without the joinder of the other spouse under some constitutional and statutory provisions, but under other provisions both spouses must join in the contract for the improvement.

Under some constitutional and statutory provisions a lien on a homestead for materials furnished for its improvement may arise under a contract with the spouse owning the property without the joinder of the other spouse.⁶⁹ Under other constitutional or statutory provisions, in order that a claimant may be able to acquire a lien, both spouses must join in the contract for the improvement,⁷⁰ which contract must be executed in compliance with constitutional

Estoppel. Regardless of whether or not as a proposition of law a valid lien can be created against a homestead by estoppel,⁷² it has been held that, where a husband and wife lead an innocent third person to believe that a valid lien has been created on their homestead and such third person is caused to invest his funds on the faith and credit of such lien, the husband and wife are estopped as to such person to plead that the lien is invalid.⁷³ However, there can be no estoppel if the truth is known to all parties.⁷⁴

c. Property of Wife

(1) In general

(2) Contract of husband

(1) In General

A married woman may contract for, authorize, or consent to repairs or improvements on her property so as to subject it to a mechanic's lien in jurisdictions where her common-law disability to contract has been removed, but not where such disability still exists.

A married woman, whose common-law disability to contract, as discussed in Husband and Wife § 176, has not been removed, cannot enter into a contract for the improvement of her property, which will subject it to a mechanic's lien.⁷⁵ Where, however, constitutional and statutory provisions give to a married woman power to contract generally or with respect to her separate estate, as discussed in Husband and Wife §§ 178, 309, it is generally held that mechanics' lien statutes apply so as to enable such a lien to be acquired for repairs or improvements made on the separate property of a married woman under a contract with her or with her express or implied authority.⁷⁶

The acquisition of a mechanic's lien on a married woman's property is subject to such restrictions and limitations, if any, as are imposed by statute,⁷⁷ there must be a compliance with all the requirements of the statutes in order that a lien may

Wife's failure to act

Failure of wife to indorse check, which bank loaning money on basis of mechanic's lien contract made payable to husband and wife, is immaterial where transaction is a community affair, and husband has right to collect the check and direct disbursement of proceeds in erection of building on which mechanic's lien was executed—United Sav. Bank of Detroit v. Frazier, Tex Civ App, 116 S W 2d 933, error dismissed.

Representations in instrument

be obtained.⁷⁸ Under some statutes a mechanic's lien may be acquired against the property of a married woman the same as if she were a feme sole,⁷⁹ and may arise where the circumstances are such as to bind her and her property.⁸⁰ In order that mechanics' liens may arise out of a contract by a married woman for the improvement of her separate estate, it is not necessary that it should have been her intention at the time to charge the estate with such liens.⁸¹

(2) Contract of Husband

(a) In general

(b) Wife's knowledge, consent, or failure to object

(a) In General

In the absence of some statutory provision authorizing it, a mechanic's lien does not arise on the property of a married woman under a contract for a building or other improvement entered into by her husband, unless she has expressly or impliedly authorized him to act as her agent, or is estopped to deny his agency, or has subsequently ratified his acts.

As a general rule, in the absence of some statutory provision expressly authorizing it,⁸² a mechanic's lien does not arise on the property of a married woman under a contract for a building or improvement entered into by the husband,⁸³ particularly where the contract is in his own name and on his own credit,⁸⁴ unless he is her agent in making the contract,⁸⁵ or she consents to the contract, as discussed infra subdivision c (2) (b) of this section, or, under the circumstances, she is estopped, as against the lien claimant, to set up her ownership⁸⁶ or to deny the agency of the husband,⁸⁷ or that the contract and improvement were made for her immediate use, enjoyment, or benefit,⁸⁸ or, in other words, unless she has expressly or impliedly authorized the husband to contract as her agent,⁸⁹ or has held him out as her agent,⁹⁰ or has subsequently ratified his acts.⁹¹ The rule that the wife's property is not subject to a mechanic's lien under a contract with the husband is especially applicable where the contract or improvement is made against her protest,⁹² even though her protest is made to the husband and not to the person furnishing materials.⁹³

from the circumstances of the case.⁹⁴ It will not be implied, however, merely from the marital relation,⁹⁵ or from the mere fact that he occupies⁹⁶ or manages and controls⁹⁷ her real estate, or from the mere fact that he discussed the question of repairs with her.⁹⁸

Acts of the wife which standing alone are not necessarily conclusive of the agency of the husband for her, but which may be considered, and, in connection with other facts, may justify a finding of agency, include the making of payments by her under the contract,⁹⁹ her subsequent occupation of the building as a residence,¹ and her suggestions or directions as to the work,² provided such suggestions or directions are such as to evidence something more than the interest ordinarily shown by a wife in improvements made by her husband.³ Also, the wife's joinder in, or execution of, a mortgage or deed of trust to raise money to pay for the improvement is generally considered a circumstance which, although not conclusive, tends to establish the agency of the husband in contracting for the improvement,⁴ and in some instances appears to have been sufficient, of itself, to establish his agency for her in the matter.⁵ It is not required, in order to subject the wife's property to a mechanic's lien, that the husband be such an agent as can bind her personally

It has been held that, where parties have contracted with the husband for the erection of a building on property as community property, without notice of any claim of his wife that it was her separate property, their liens will prevail over such a claim asserted by her after they were acquired.⁷

(b) Wife's Knowledge, Consent, or Failure to Object

A married woman's property is not subject to a mechanic's lien for improvements made thereon under a contract with her husband merely by reason of her knowledge of the making of the improvement or the contract therefor, or her consent, acquiescence, or failure to object to it, unless a statute authorizes a lien where she consents or fails to object to the improvement.

The property of the wife is not subject to a mechanic's lien for an improvement made under a contract with her husband merely by reason of her knowledge of the making of the improvement,⁸ or her knowledge of a contract made in her husband's name,⁹ or, under conditions where the common-law disability of a married woman to make oral contracts exists, by the fact that the work is done under her inspection or direction.¹⁰ Furthermore, except under some statutes,¹¹ such a lien will not arise by reason of her knowledge and consent, acquiescence, or failure to object to the improvement¹² This rule is particularly applicable under statutes requiring a contract with the owner or his authorized agent, and under such statutes the mere passive permission or consent to the contract of the husband is not sufficient to render her property subject to the lien.¹³ The wife's mere acceptance of the status quo after the improvement has been completed and her recognition of an obligation to pay for it will not suffice to create a lien on her property.¹⁴

On the other hand, the wife's property has frequently been held subject to the lien where she has knowledge of, and consents to, the improvement¹⁵ or both the contract and the improvement,¹⁶ or where she has knowledge of both the contract and the improvement and fails to object¹⁷ or to disclose her ownership¹⁸ A lien on the wife's land does not arise from her consent or permission that her husband shall build on the land at his own expense¹⁹

d. Dower or Curtesy

The wife's inchoate right of dower in her husband's property cannot be cut off or barred in a mechanic's lien proceeding where she neither knew of, nor consented to, the improvement in question.

The wife's inchoate right of dower in her husband's property cannot be cut off or barred in a mechanic's lien proceeding where she neither knew of, nor consented to, the improvement in question²⁰ Under some statutes the husband cannot charge his curtesy estate in his wife's land unless she joins with him in the contract²¹

§ 64. — Infants and Their Agents

An infant under disability to contract cannot subject his property to a mechanic's lien for its improvement, except where a statute provides otherwise.

Since an infant is under a common-law disability to contract, he cannot by a contract for the improvement of his land subject it to a mechanic's lien for such improvement,²² nor will a retention of the property as improved, after majority, amount to such ratification as to sustain a lien²³ Other authority has held that an infant may disaffirm as against a mechanic's lien for materials furnished either with his consent or at his request.²⁴ However, under mechanics' lien statutes providing that minors over the age of eighteen years shall be included within the word "owner," the property of a minor over the prescribed age may be subject to a lien under a contract made by another as his agent, and either authorized²⁵ or ratified²⁶ by him. Of course there is no lien on an infant's property under a contract made by another person not his guardian and not possessing any authority to bind him.²⁷

as his agent,³⁰ even though the tenant may have failed to comply with the intention and instructions of the lessor and his agent to use old lumber obtained from a wrecked building.³¹ A lien also may be acquired on the lessor's interest for materials furnished the lessee and used in the improvement of the leased property where he and the lessee are engaged in a joint adventure³² or where he is active and instrumental in having the improvement made.³³

A materialman who refuses to sell to the lessee in possession, but instead sells to a stranger and holds such stranger personally liable, has been held not to be entitled to a lien on either the owner's interest or the improvements.³⁴

b. Creation of Lien on Interest of Lessees and Sublessees

A lessee or a sublessee is an owner within the meaning of mechanics' lien statutes, and his interest may be subjected to a lien for improvements.

A lessee is an owner within the meaning of the mechanics' lien statutes,³⁵ and his interest is subject to a lien for improvements made under a contract with him,³⁶ or for improvements made with his consent under a contract with a sublessee,³⁷ or for improvements made by a sublessee, where the lessee, by his conduct and course of dealing, has estopped himself to disclaim liability.³⁸ Likewise a sublessee may subject his own interest to a lien.³⁹ A month-to-month tenant, however, has been held to have no interest in the realty on which a lien can be levied.⁴⁰

Estoppel. A lessor may be estopped to assert that the lessee has a less interest than he represented him to have when negotiations for the improvements were being made with the lien claimant.⁴¹

Provision in lease against liens. A provision in the lease prohibiting the enforcement of a lien against the leased property will not prevent the acquisition of a lien against the lessee's interest in the leased premises, as such a provision is for the benefit of the lessor and not the lessee.⁴²

Lien on building or improvement. Under some statutes a mechanic's lien may be had on a building erected or improvement made by a lessee upon the demised premises,⁴³ at least where the building or improvement does not become a part of the realty,⁴⁴ and in some instances even though the lease provides that all improvements shall belong to the lessor on termination of the lease.⁴⁵ In other cases, how-

Where a building constructed by a lessee without the lessor's consent has become a part of the freehold because of the termination of the tenancy, it has been held that thereafter a lien cannot be acquired against it under a contract with the lessee.⁴⁸ A lien will not arise against a preexisting building for its reconstruction, alteration, or repair by a lessee under circumstances which give no lien against the estate of the lessor.⁴⁹

Materialmen furnishing tenant with materials for construction of building upon leased premises was held not entitled to mechanic's lien against fee on ground that estoppel against landlord to exercise option to forfeit lease because rent payments were delinquent resulted in merger of leasehold with fee, where there had been no forfeiture, since such estoppel caused estates to remain separate—Platner Lumber Co v. (4) Effect of provisions of lease

(1) In General

The estate or property of a lessor is not subject to a mechanic's lien for improvements contracted for by his lessee unless the lessor has made him his agent or otherwise conferred the requisite authority on him, or has ratified his acts, or is estopped to deny the validity of the lien.

A contract of a lessee for improvements does not give rise to a lien against the estate or property of the lessor⁵⁰ unless the lessee is the agent⁵¹ or other statutory representative⁵² of the lessor. In other words, a lien does not arise against the lessor's estate for such improvements unless the lessor has conferred the requisite authority on the lessee⁵³ or has ratified his acts,⁵⁴ or is estopped to deny the validity of the lien,⁵⁵ or unless the lease is a mere artifice or scheme resorted to by the lessor to secure the placing of valuable improvements on his property without liability of his estate therefor,⁵⁶ or, according to some authorities, unless the improvements are made by the lessee or sublessee at the request⁵⁷ or with the consent, as discussed infra subdivision c (2) of this section, of the lessor. Also the character of the alteration or improvement must be within the scope of those for which a lien may be acquired against the lessor's interest or estate.⁵⁸ Moreover, it has been held that a lien will not arise against the interest of the lessor where the work is done by the lessee himself.⁵⁹

While the mere relation of landlord and tenant does not alone create an agency in the tenant authorizing him, by his contract for improvements, to render the landlord's interest in the property subject to a mechanic's lien⁶⁰ or create a contractual liability by the landlord for the improvements,⁶¹ nevertheless the tenant may, irrespective of the relation of landlord and tenant, be constituted the agent of the landlord with authority to bind the interest of the latter.⁶² In determining whether the lessee is the agent of the lessor, the court is not confined to the provisions of the lease⁶³ but may consider all the facts connected with the transaction.⁶⁴ The landlord's interest is not rendered subject to a lien by a mere understanding that it is optional with the tenant to make repairs at his own expense⁶⁵ or by a deduction of the cost of the repairs from the rent without any previous agreement therefor⁶⁶ and simply because the tenant had suffered a misfortune.⁶⁷

(2) Consent of Lessor

Under statutes requiring a contract with the owner or his agent, a mechanic's lien against the lessor's interest does not arise from his consent to improvements by the lessee; but it may arise therefrom where the statutes allow a lien to be predicated on the consent of the owner unless the statute is expressly made inapplicable to improvements of a lessee.

Under some statutes, such as those requiring a contract with the owner or his agent, a mechanic's lien against the interest of the lessor does not arise from his consent to the making of improvements or alterations by the lessee,⁶⁸ especially where the lessor's consent was made on the condition that the improvement should be made without cost to him,⁶⁹ and even though the lessee paid the lessor a certain sum as an inducement to obtain his consent.⁷⁰ Such consent is not deemed to constitute the lessee

the agent of the lessor within the meaning of such statutes,⁷¹ and, where it fails to appear that the lessee was constituted by the landowner as his agent to make the improvement, the claimant's lien can extend no further than the improvements constructed.⁷² Also under some statutes the mere inactive consent of the lessor to improvements by the lessee is insufficient to enable a lien to be acquired against the lessor's interest.⁷³

Under other statutes, such as those allowing a lien to be predicated on the consent of the owner, a mechanic's lien against the estate or property of the lessor may arise where he consents to improvements by the lessee or sublessee.⁷⁴ Even under such statutes a lien cannot be based on the alleged consent of the lessor unless he has given his consent⁷⁵ or by his conduct and declarations has created the appearance of doing so.⁷⁶ Also the consent given must be such as is contemplated by statute,⁷⁷ with the intent of subjecting the land to a lien,⁷⁸ and the work done must be within the scope of the consent given.⁷⁹

Some statutes allowing a mechanic's lien generally for an improvement made with the consent of the owner are, by their express terms, inapplicable where work or material is furnished at the request of a lessee.⁸⁰

(3) Lessor's Knowledge and Permission or Acquiescence or Failure to Object

Generally a mechanic's lien on the estate or property of a lessor for improvements made by his lessee cannot be predicated on his mere knowledge thereof, or on his knowledge and acquiescence, permission, or failure to object thereto, or on his expectation that the lessee will make them, but under some statutes his estate is subject to a lien for improvements he knowingly permits the lessee to make.

It has generally been held that a mechanic's lien on the estate or property of a lessor cannot be predicated on his mere knowledge that improvements are being made by the lessee,⁸¹ or on his knowledge and acquiescence,⁸² permission,⁸³ or failure to object,⁸⁴ or on the lessor's expectation that the lessee will make certain improvements.⁸⁵ However, under the terms of some statutes the estate of the lessor is subject to the lien where he knowingly permits improvements to be made by the lessee,⁸⁶ or has knowledge or constructive notice of such improvements,⁸⁷ or knowingly suffers or permits the tenant, acting as though he were the owner, to make a contract for the improvement⁸⁸

The failure of the landlord, having knowledge of the making of the improvements by his tenant, to object thereto is an important circumstance to be considered on the question of his consent,⁸⁹ and there is some authority for the view that a lien may be based on the failure of the lessor, having knowledge of the improvements, to object thereto.⁹⁰

Provision against assignment of lease
Provision in lease that no assignment thereof would release lessee from obligation to erect improvements would not make erection of building by lessee's assignee wholly unauthorized by lessor, so as to exempt lessor from mechanic's lien.—

(d) Provisions against liens

(e) Provisions as to notice or consent

(a) In General

Generally a lessor's estate or property is subject to mechanics' liens for alterations, improvements, or repairs which the lease requires or obligates the lessee to make, but not for those it merely authorizes or permits him to make.

It has frequently been held that a lien attaches where the terms of the lease require or obligate the lessee to make improvements,⁹¹ at least improvements of a permanent character or which are beneficial to the reversionary interests of the lessor, as discussed infra subdivision c (4) (b) of this section. Such provisions are deemed to constitute consent by the lessor to the making of the improvements⁹² or to constitute the tenant the agent of the lessor.⁹³ On the other hand, in some cases a lien has been denied even where the lease obligated the tenant to make improvements,⁹⁴ particularly where the improvement is primarily for the benefit of the tenant,⁹⁵ and such provisions have been held not to constitute the lessee the agent⁹⁶ or contractor⁹⁷ of the lessor. According to some authorities, provisions merely authorizing or permitting the lessee to make improvements do not constitute him the agent of the lessor,⁹⁸ or make the tenant and lessor joint proprietors in the construction of the improvement,⁹⁹ or render the property of the lessor subject to a lien.¹ There are cases, however, in which a lien has been allowed where the provisions of the lease authorized improvements by the lessee,² but the lessor's interest will not be bound by a lien for improvements contracted for by his lessee where the lease authorizes the lessee to make improvements only on the performance of conditions precedent, which are not performed.³

In some,⁴ but not other,⁵ cases a lien on the estate or property of the lessor for repairs made by the lessee has been allowed where the lease contained a provision for the making of repairs by the lessee.

A lien against the interest of the lessor does not exist for an improvement other than that provided for in the lease⁶ unless there are other facts sufficient to constitute a basis for a lien.⁷

Constructive knowledge of terms. A person contracting with the lessee is charged with knowledge of the terms of the lease where it is on record⁸ or where he knows that the person with whom he is dealing is not the owner of the property⁹ or has received a letter from the lessor calling attention to the provisions of the lease.¹⁰

where the lease provides that they shall belong or revert to the lessor or it is contemplated they will be of benefit to the lessor, but not where the lease provides that the improvements shall remain the property of the lessee

A mechanic's lien has frequently been held to attach to the estate or property of the lessor for improvements made by the lessee which, by the terms of the lease, are to belong or revert to the lessor,¹¹ or are to be permanent in character, becoming part of the realty and of benefit to the lessor,¹² or which are to be maintained on the premises during the entire term of the lease and on which the lessor will have a lien for rent and taxes.¹³ In some cases, however, lease provisions that improvements made by the lessee are to belong or revert to the lessor have been deemed not to constitute the lessee an agent of the lessor with authority to charge the property,¹⁴ and a lien on the lessor's interest for such improvements has been denied,¹⁵ at least where their construction is optional with the lessee¹⁶ and for his use, benefit, and convenience.¹⁷ It has generally been held that no lien attaches to the lessor's interest where the lease provides that the building, structure, or material shall remain the property of the lessee and be removable by him at the expiration of the lease;¹⁸ but in some cases, where the improvements made were of a permanent character, such a provision has been regarded as nugatory and ineffectual to prevent a lien.¹⁹

(c) Provisions as to Liability for Cost

In some decisions a lien has been allowed against the property of the lessor where the lease provides for the making of improvements by the lessee at the cost of the lessor.

In some decisions a lien has been allowed against the estate or property of the lessor where the lease provides for the making of improvements by the lessee at the cost of the lessor, either generally²⁰ or by deducting the cost from the rent,²¹ or for the reimbursement of the lessee from the rentals arising out of the improvement,²² or where, under the lease, the owner is obligated to reimburse the tenant for the cost of the improvements,²³ and in such case the mere fact that the lease provides that the building shall be constructed at the cost of the lessee does not prevent the attachment of the lien.²⁴ In other decisions a lien has been denied where the lease provides for a deduction of the cost of the improvements from the rent,²⁵ at least where the lease pro-

Fact that lessor is given option in lease to acquire improvements made by lessee under certain conditions is not tantamount to obligation to reimburse lessee so as to render lessor's interest subject to laborers' and materialman's liens—Deka Development Co. v. Fox, 39 P2d 143, 170 Okl 228.

vision with respect to repairs and alterations is permissive and the lessee is under no obligation to make them,²⁶ and, under some statutes, even though the lease requires the lessee to make the repairs or improvements for which a lien is sought.²⁷ A provision in the lease that, at the end thereof, there shall be an equitable adjustment for improvements made does not constitute the lessee an agent of the lessor so as to render the property subject to a mechanic's lien for improvements made under contract with the lessee.²⁸

A lien against the estate of the lessor has been allowed for improvements made by a lessee whose lease provides that improvements by him shall be at his own expense,²⁹ where, despite such a provision, the lessor knowingly permitted the improvement to be made,³⁰ but such a lien has also been denied³¹ even though the lessor had knowledge of the furnishing of the material.³² A general consent in the lease, however, for the lessee to make alterations or improvements at his own expense has been held not to subject the lessor's interest to a lien for alterations made exclusively for the benefit of the tenant and to which he did not specifically consent.³³

of this section, in some jurisdictions a lien attaches where the terms of the lease require or obligate the lessee to make improvements, it has been stated that the lessor's interest is subject to the lien under such circumstances, irrespective of whether the cost of the improvement is to be borne by the lessor or by the lessee.³⁴

(d) Provisions against Liens

Under the statutes in some jurisdictions stipulations contained in the lease and intended to protect the interest of the lessor against mechanics' liens are given effect, but under the terms of the statutes in other jurisdictions such stipulations are regarded as unavailing unless the lien claimant had notice of the lease.

Under the statutes in some jurisdictions stipulations contained in the lease and intended to protect the interest of the lessor against mechanics' liens are given effect,³⁵ even though the lessor is interested ultimately in the improvement,³⁶ and by the terms of the lease the lessee is required to make the improvement.³⁷ Under the terms of the statutes in other jurisdictions, however, such stipulations are regarded as unavailing to prevent a lien which would otherwise attach³⁸ unless claimant had notice of the stipulation.³⁹

(e) Provisions as to Notice or Consent

In order for a lien to be acquired against a lessor's estate for alterations or improvements by the lessee, there must be a compliance with provisions in the lease as to the necessity for notice of, or consent to, such improvements or alterations, unless waived; the lessor's consent, in accordance with the provisions of the lease, will not subject his estate to a lien where under the statutes a lien may not be predicated against a lessor's estate merely on his consent to the improvement.

Where a lien against the lessor's estate may be predicated on the lessor's consent to improvements by the lessee, as discussed supra subdivision c (2) of this section, and where there is a provision in the lease that changes, alterations, or additions shall not be made without the consent of the landlord, a lien on the lessor's interest arises when and only when the required consent has been given,⁴⁰ there has been a compliance with all conditions attached to the consent,⁴¹ and the work done is within the scope of the consent given.⁴² Such a provision controls other provisions of the lease which might otherwise be construed to authorize a contract by the lessee which would give rise to a lien against the estate of the lessor.⁴³ On the other hand, where a lien against the lessor's estate cannot be predicated merely on his consent to the making of improvements by the lessee, as discussed supra subdivision c (2) of this section, the lessor's interest cannot be subjected to a lien from the mere fact that he consents in accordance with provisions of the lease prohibiting the lessee from making alterations without the lessor's consent.⁴⁴

Waiver. A provision in the lease that no improvements shall be made except with the owner's written consent may be waived.⁴⁵ Also a provision of the lease requiring a prior notice to the landlord of alterations may be waived by him,⁴⁶ as by failing to object after acquiring knowledge that alterations are being made.⁴⁷

§ 66. — Licensees

A mechanic's lien cannot be acquired for materials furnished or labor performed in the construction of improvements on land under a contract with a licensee acting without authority from the licensor.

A licensee has no title or interest in the land, as considered in Licenses § 84, and no lien will arise for materials furnished or labor performed in the construction of improvements upon the land under a contract with a licensee,⁴⁸ who has no authority, express or implied, to bind the licensor.⁴⁹

§ 67. — Life Tenants

A life tenant may subject his interest in the property to a mechanic's lien, but he cannot subject the remainder or reversion thereto unless the remainderman or reversioner authorizes or permits it.

A life tenant may, by contract for the improvement of the land, subject it to a mechanic's lien to the extent of his life interest,⁵⁰ but he cannot create a lien on the reversion or remainder⁵¹ unless, under the provisions of some statutes, the remainderman knowingly permits the contract to be made⁵² or unless the remainderman has promised to make the improvement or repairs out of insurance proceeds received by him and has failed to keep his promise.⁵³

A remainderman cannot create a lien on the interest of the life tenant.⁵⁴

§ 68. — Mortgagors and Mortgagees

A mortgagor can subject his, but not the mortgagee's, interest in the property to a mechanic's lien. A mortgagee is an owner within the meaning of mechanic's lien statutes where he is in, but not where he is out of, possession.

A mortgagor in possession can by his contract give rise to a lien affecting his interest,⁵⁵ but he cannot subject the property to mechanics' liens for improvements thereon as against the rights of his mortgagee⁵⁶ unless the latter assents to the contract⁵⁷ or improvement.⁵⁸ The mere fact that the mortgagee consented to the improvement, however, has been held insufficient to subject his interest to a mechanic's lien therefor,⁵⁹ although it has also been held that the assent of a mortgagee holding the legal title to real property to an improvement thereon is sufficient to subject his title to the lien arising from the improvement.⁶⁰ As against the mortgagee the lien claimant may have a right to a lien on the improvement itself.⁶¹ After a decree of foreclosure and sale thereunder, the mortgagor has no such ownership as will give a lien to a person who afterward furnishes material or performs work on his contract,⁶² unless through subsequent purchase or other circumstances he may be held to have an interest in the premises.⁶³ A mortgagee is to be deemed an owner, within the meaning of the mechanics' lien statutes, where he is in,⁶⁴ but not where he is out of,⁶⁵ possession.

§ 69. — Part or Joint Owners

A part owner of property is an owner within the meaning of mechanics' lien statutes and may subject his interest to a lien for the entire cost of improvements on the common property; but he cannot bind his cotenant's interest unless the latter consents thereto. Partnership property may become subject to a mechanic's lien under a contract made in the partnership name by one or more of the partners.

A cotenant of an undivided interest in realty is an owner within the meaning of mechanics' lien statutes;⁶⁶ and where a part owner contracts for, or authorizes the making of, an improvement on the common property his interest therein may be subjected to a lien for the entire cost thereof.⁶⁷ A tenant in common in possession may contract so as to bind his interest,⁶⁸ but has no authority to bind his cotenant's interest⁶⁹ unless the latter consents to⁷⁰ or ratifies⁷¹ the contract, in which case the entire interest may be bound. Mere knowledge of a coowner that another coowner is improving the property will not, however, subject his interest to a mechanic's lien⁷². Where tenants in common enter into a contract for the erection of a building on the property, the contract binding each separately to the payment only of the amount subscribed by him, which is proportionate to his interest in the property, the lien attaches to the undivided interest of each of the owners for the amount personally owing by him,⁷³ and not to the entire lot and building for the balance unpaid on the entire contract.⁷⁴

Partnership property may become subject to a mechanic's lien under a contract made in the partnership name by one or more of the partners,⁷⁵ even though the legal title to the property is in one or more, but not all, of the partners,⁷⁶ or is in an agent of the partners.⁷⁷ In the case of a joint adventure, the act of one member in contracting for a building or improvement which is germane to the general purpose of the joint enterprise is sufficient to render not only his interest⁷⁸ but also the interest of the other members⁷⁹ subject to a mechanic's lien, his interest being bound on the ground that he is a joint owner⁸⁰ and the interest of the other members being bound on the ground that he is their agent⁸¹.

A trustee of an express trust may not contract for improvements so as to subject the trust property to a mechanic's lien unless he is empowered to do so by statute, a court order, or the provisions of the trust, but a trustee of a resulting or unrecorded trust may do so. A cestui que trust may subject the trust property to a mechanic's lien where the trust is a simple or dry trust, but not where the trustee has power to manage and control the trust property unless empowered to do so by statute.

The trustee of an express trust may not by his contract create a mechanic's lien on the trust property⁸² unless the requisite power is conferred on him by statute⁸³ or by a court of competent jurisdiction,⁸⁴ or there is something in the instrument which created the trust which empowers him to do so,⁸⁵ and what the trustee is without power to do directly, he may not do indirectly,⁸⁶ as by failing to object to the furnishing of materials on the order of other persons⁸⁷.

A trustee having full power to manage, improve, and repair the trust property may usually by his contract subject it to a mechanic's lien⁸⁸. On the other hand, no mechanic's lien will attach under the contract of the trustee for the repairs or improvements, where he has no power to make such a contract on behalf of the estate,⁸⁹ or where the instrument creating the trust, although authorizing improvements by the trustee, expressly provides that

In case of a simple or dry trust a mechanic's lien may exist for labor performed or materials furnished under or by virtue of a contract with, or the consent of, the equitable owner of the property;⁹⁴ but, where a trustee has power to manage and control the trust property, a contract with the cestui que trust alone, not consented to or approved by the trustee, is not sufficient as a basis for a mechanic's lien.⁹⁵ In some instances the statutes expressly provide that cestui que trust shall be deemed owners.⁹⁶

Trust to secure debt. A trustor who executes a trust deed solely to secure a debt is the owner of the property as far as the establishment of a mechanic's lien is concerned.⁹⁷

§ 71. — Vendors and Vendees

- a. In general
- b. Vendors
- c. Vendees

a. In General

Both parties to an executory contract for the sale of real property may be treated, under certain circumstances, as owners within the meaning of mechanics' lien statutes, but prior to the making of the contract a prospective purchaser may not be so considered.

Under certain circumstances both parties to an executory contract for the sale of real property may be treated as owners within the meaning of the mechanics' lien statutes.⁹⁸ On the other hand, various persons have been held not to be owners within the meaning of such statutes, such as a person in possession under a deed placed in escrow until payment of the purchase money,⁹⁹ a lessee in possession with an unexercised option to purchase,¹ the holder of a naked option to purchase,² or one who is merely negotiating for the purchase of realty.³

A vendor who holds merely a vendor's lien is not an owner within the meaning of mechanics' lien statutes, but a vendor under an executory contract of sale may be so considered.

A person merely holding a vendor's lien does not have sufficient ownership to support a lien⁴ or to require his written consent to the improvement in order to waive his lien, where a statute requires the owner's written consent in order to subject his interest to a lien for improvements made at the instance of a person not the owner of the land.⁵ Where the vendee under a contract of purchase is in possession of the land, his vendor cannot without authority from him subject the land as against his vendee to mechanics' liens for improvements thereon.⁶ On the other hand, a vendor is an owner, within the meaning of the statutes, until the title passes.⁷ Where the vendor in an executory contract of sale directly contracts for improvements, he thereby subjects his interest in the land to a mechanic's lien,⁸ and, as discussed subdivision c (3) (a) of this section, under various statutes he may subject his interest to a lien by consenting to a contract for improvements entered into by the vendee.

Where a person sells real property under agreement that certain improvements are to be made on it by him, a lien for work performed for, or materials furnished to, him may exist on the theory that he is the owner of the property,⁹ or at least that he is the authorized agent of the vendee in making the improvements,¹⁰ or that the vendee has consented to the contract for labor and materials.¹¹ Where the holder of an unrecorded bond for a conveyance stands by and sees work go on under a contract with the holder of the legal and record title, who is in possession, he cannot afterward defeat a lien by the production of such bond.¹²

(1) In General

A vendee in possession of realty under an unrecorded deed or executory contract to purchase generally is held to be an owner within the meaning of mechanics' lien statutes.

A purchaser or vendee in possession under an unrecorded deed¹³ or under an executory contract to purchase¹⁴ generally is held to be an owner within the meaning of mechanics' lien statutes, and a mechanic's lien may be acquired under a contract with him for improvements on the property.¹⁵ In some cases the question whether a mechanic's lien may exist under a contract with a vendee of land is considered from the standpoint of a lien on the land, and it has been held that a person in possession of land under a contract of purchase and who, by reason of breach of contract or otherwise, does not acquire title is not such an owner, within the meaning of the mechanics' lien statute, as to be able to fix a lien on the land.¹⁶ However, except in at least one jurisdiction,¹⁷ it has also been held that, where he subsequently receives a conveyance, a lien may exist under his contract for labor or materials,¹⁸ particularly where the vendor knew the improvements were being made.¹⁹

(2) Lien on Vendee's Interest

A purchaser in possession of real property under a contract of sale is so far an owner that he can subject his interest therein to a mechanic's lien for improvements thereon.

chaser in possession of real property under a contract of sale is so far an owner that he can by his contract for improvements on the land render his interest therein subject to a mechanic's lien,²¹ including any interest which he subsequently acquires under his contract of purchase,²² at least where the contract of sale provides for construction of the improvement by the vendee.²³ The rule has been held applicable where the vendee is in possession under an oral contract of sale,²⁴ where the circumstances are such as to take the contract out of the statute of frauds and make it enforceable,²⁵ but there is other authority which holds that a vendee under an oral contract to purchase does not have sufficient ownership in the property to render it subject to a mechanic's lien thereon,²⁶ particularly where the contract to purchase is not enforceable.²⁷ The vendor and the vendee cannot, by any stipulation between themselves, deprive third persons, not parties to the contract of sale, of their statutory rights to liens for material or labor subsequently furnished to the vendee for the construction of buildings on the premises.²⁸

A purchaser who is not in possession is not an owner within the meaning of some mechanics' lien statutes.²⁹ However, it has been held that the purchaser is estopped to set up his lack of possession as against a lien claimant with whom he contracted.³⁰ The title of a purchaser at a mortgage foreclosure sale may be subjected to a lien for materials used at his request or with his consent for the subsequent improvement of the property.³¹

(3) Lien on Vendor's Interest

- (a) In general
- (b) Knowledge, permission, or failure to object
- (c) Where contract provides for improvements

(a) In General

A lien affecting the interest of the vendor of land cannot arise out of the doing of work or furnishing of materials pursuant to a contract with the vendee unless the vendor has authorized or consented to it in such manner as the statute requires for the acquisition of a lien against the property of an owner.

No lien affecting the interest of the vendor of land can arise out of the doing of work or furnishing of materials pursuant to a contract with the purchaser,³² particularly where the contract of sale merely acquiesced in,⁴⁵ or consented to,⁴⁶ the furnishing of the material or the performance of the labor.

Recorded contract Under some statutes a vendor under a recorded contract of sale is not estopped to resist lien claims where he has neither in his contract authorized the improvement nor said or done things which operate as an estoppel,⁴⁷ and he is not required to forfeit the contract immediately on default in order to prevent the attachment of liens⁴⁸

(b) Knowledge, Permission, or Failure to Object

The fact that the vendor has knowledge of the making of the improvements by his vendee does not subject his interests to the mechanics' liens.

The fact that the vendor has knowledge of the making of the improvements by his vendee does not subject his interests to the mechanics' liens,⁴⁹ nor are his interests subjected thereto by the fact that he obtains knowledge that they have been made some time after they are completed⁵⁰ or from the mere expectation that the vendee will make them⁵¹ Also, in the absence of a statute providing that a failure to object or to give notice of nonresponsibility shall subject his interest to a lien, as discussed infra § 84, a vendor does not subject his interest to

a lien by a mere failure to object to improvements by his vendee,⁵² since in many instances he is powerless to prevent the making of the improvements⁵³

Even permission to make the improvements may not render the interest of the vendor subject to lien,⁵⁴ especially where the permission is indefinite and does not relate to specific improvements,⁵⁵ and particularly where the statute requires the improvement to have been requested by the owner⁵⁶ In order to subject the vendor's interest to the lien there must be some affirmative act which shows that he consented to subordinate his claim to that of the laborers and materialmen.⁵⁷

Where there is no fraud or deceit, a lien cannot be obtained for materials furnished one who, with the consent of the owners, is permitted to build under a license from the holder of an option to buy⁵⁸

(c) Where Contract Provides for Improvements

The interest of the vendor under an executory contract of sale may be subjected to a mechanic's lien for buildings or improvements which the contract requires the vendee to make, but not for those the contract merely authorizes him to make.

While there is some authority to the contrary,⁵⁹ as a general rule, where the contract of purchase expressly requires or obligates the purchaser to erect certain buildings or make certain improvements, the interest of the vendor becomes subject to the liens of persons furnishing labor and materials for the buildings or improvements,⁶⁰ even though the vendee forfeits his contract,⁶¹ it being considered that the vendor consents to the improvements⁶² or makes the vendee his agent.⁶³ In such case a further stipulation in the contract of sale that any mechanic's lien shall be subject to the vendor's interest in the property does not destroy the vendor's consent,⁶⁴ nor is it sufficient to subordinate to the provision in the contract of sale merely authorizes, but does not require, the vendee to make improvements on the property,⁶⁹ he is not, in doing so, the agent of the vendor, and the vendor's estate or interest is not subject to a lien for such improvements.⁷⁰ Where a vendor stipulates with his vendee for the improvement of land at the latter's cost but the contract leaves it optional with the vendee as to whether he shall improve, the vendor's title is not subject to a lien under the vendee's contract for improvements.⁷¹ Also an agreement by the vendor to advance money to the purchaser to build does not alone render the vendor's interest subject to a mechanic's lien,⁷² but, in connection with a stipulation requiring the vendee to build, it is sufficient for this purpose.⁷³

A provision in the contract of sale for the vendee to keep the premises in good condition and repair does not authorize the vendee to purchase and install new equipment or make improvements so as to subject the vendor's interest to a mechanic's lien therefor,⁷⁴ particularly where the contract also provides that the vendee shall not make any material alterations in the premises or create any lien thereon without the written consent of the vendor.⁷⁵

Contract authorizing mortgage for improvements. Where the contract of sale expressly authorizes a mortgage by the vendee to raise money for the erection of the building which should have precedence of the vendor's lien for the purchase price, and the building is erected without a mortgage being given, it has been held that mechanics' liens to the extent of the authorized mortgage have precedence over the vendor's lien,⁷⁶ as the vendee in the erection of the building should be considered to such an extent the agent of the vendor.⁷⁷

(4) Lien on Improvement

Under some statutes a lien for improvements made by the vendee will attach to the improvement itself.

Under some statutes, although a lien for improvements erected by the vendee will not affect the interest of the vendor, as discussed supra subdivision c (3) (a) of this section, it will attach to the improvement itself, such as a building,⁷⁸ in which case the lien will not be invalidated by the failure of the owners of the land to contract for the materials used.⁷⁹ With respect to such building the lien will have precedence over any claim of the vendor,⁸⁰ even though some injury to the realty may result from the removal of the building,⁸¹ or, under some statutes, the lien attaches to the building improved to the extent that the improvement increases its value.⁸² In the absence of some statutory provision, however, the lien cannot be enforced against the improvement to the injury of the vendor.⁸³

§ 72. — Other Persons

Various persons, including a purchaser at a judicial sale before the deed is delivered, have been held not to have such ownership as will support a lien under contract with them.

A purchaser at a judicial sale, before the deed is delivered, does not have such ownership as will support a lien under a contract with him,⁸⁴ and this

The right to a mechanic's lien under a particular contract, at the outset, depends on the nature of the contract and not on what is done under it⁸⁷. In order to acquire a lien a claimant must show that the contract, as of the date of its making, brings him within the terms of the law authorizing a lien⁸⁸. The contract must be valid⁸⁹ and enforceable⁹⁰. Instrument held contract

An instrument addressed to ma-

implied,⁹³ or partly expressed and partly implied.⁹⁴

It is sufficient if work and materials are furnished and accepted,⁹⁵ or there is a mere request to furnish materials which are accordingly furnished,⁹⁶ or an employment and undertaking to do work which is accordingly done,⁹⁷ or a substantial promise to pay for materials to be furnished.⁹⁸ However, a contract cannot be implied merely from the fact that the work is done on a building belonging to a person sought to be charged,⁹⁹ and where the statute requires a contract, discussed supra § 52, mere knowledge on the part of the owner is not sufficient.¹ Where a contractor is doing business under a trade name other than his own, a contract made with him in such name shows that he is the real party in interest and entitled to a lien.²

Under some constitutional and statutory provisions, in order for a lien to be acquired against a homestead for improvements placed thereon, the contract must expressly pledge the homestead by giving a lien thereon, and a contract merely for the improvement is insufficient for the acquisition of a lien thereon.³

Joint or separate contract It is immaterial to the establishment of a lien claimed against separate lots and the improvements on each for materials

furnished and used in the erection of such improvements at a time when the lots were owned by the same person whether a joint contract for all the improvements or a separate contract for each was entered into between the builder and the owner.⁴

Subsequent contract The property is subject to a lien where, although the original contractor fails to complete the building and his surety secures another contractor to complete it, the owner joins in the contract with the second contractor,⁵ and, in addition, subsequently acts as though he had actually procured the completion of the building through the agency of the second contractor.⁶

b. Consent

- (1) In general
- (2) Conditional or qualified consent

(1) In General

In order to constitute consent of the owner on which a mechanic's lien may be based, there must be such a meeting of the minds as to make it fairly apparent that the parties intended the same thing in the same sense. Ordinarily such consent may be express or implied.

The word "consent," as used in statutes allowing a mechanic's lien to be predicated on consent of the owner, does not import a contract⁷ or make the lien dependent on the ordering of the work by the own-

terialman and signed by owner stating that money had been deposited by owner to be paid to materialman on owner's acceptance of materials furnished constituted a contract between owner and materialman—Fraser Lumber & Manufacturing Co v Laeyendecker, 9 NW 2d 97, 243 Wis 25

There must be a compliance with any statutory requirements as to the manner and form of the owner's consent to the contract or improvement¹⁷ The consent of the owner may be either express¹⁸ or implied.¹⁹ Where there is no express consent, the facts from which the inference of consent is to be

owner is in possession and control of the premises, consent may be found when he assents to improvements expecting to reap benefits from them³⁰ or has knowledge of the making of the improvement and does not object to it.³¹ Consent should not be implied contrary to the obvious truth where the owner is not estopped on equitable principles to assert the truth³² Where the owner of land upon which an improvement is being erected by a third person, on knowledge thereof, expressly prohibits the continuance of the work, he certainly cannot be considered as consenting to the continued work on the improvement.³³

Homestead. Under some statutes, in order for a mechanic's lien to be acquired on a homestead, the consent of the wife to the contract for the improvement must be given in the same manner as is required in making a sale and conveyance of the homestead.³⁴

(2) Conditional or Qualified Consent

As a general rule the consent of the owner to the improvements for which a mechanic's lien is claimed must be absolute and unconditional.

As a general rule the consent of the owner to the improvements for which a mechanic's lien is claimed must be absolute³⁵ and not clogged with conditions³⁶ A consent conditioned on the doing of the work without any expense or payment on the part of the owner is in effect a protest against the doing of the work at his expense.³⁷ The mere general consent

on the part of the owner that a third person may make alterations, etc., on the premises at his own expense, the particular alterations, etc., not being specified, does not show his consent to alterations, etc., thereafter made so as to subject his interest to mechanics' liens therefor.³⁸ However, where the consent of the owner is to the making of particular improvements, a qualification that his interest shall not be subjected to liens therefor will not prevent the liens from attaching,³⁹ especially where the person claiming a lien for material furnished or labor performed was ignorant of such qualification,⁴⁰ or where the owner had actual knowledge of the making of the improvement and expressed his satisfaction therewith⁴¹

c. Instance, Request, Permission, or Privity

Material furnished or labor performed with the permission, consent, or knowledge of the owner is not at his instance or request, and mere knowledge of the improvement or contract therefor is not sufficient to create a lien under a statute authorizing a lien where the owner knowingly suffers or permits the improvement. Under a statute authorizing a lien by persons in privity with the owner, a primary obligation by the owner to pay for the material furnished or labor performed is required.

Under a statute authorizing or requiring, in order for a lien to be acquired, that material be furnished or labor be performed at the instance or request of the owner, labor performed or material furnished with the permission, consent, or knowledge of the owner is not at his request so as to subject his interest to a lien⁴² A lien has been held to arise, however, under such a statute, where materials are furnished on the credit of the owner and in ignorance of the fact that another person has an independent contract to erect the building⁴³ "Knowingly suffer or permit," as used in some statutes, does not comprehend mere knowledge of the improvement of the property⁴⁴ or of the contract therefor,⁴⁵ but requires something more,⁴⁶ as, for example, some willful inducing act⁴⁷ or silence, amounting to a legal fraud, where there is a duty to speak⁴⁸

Privity. Under some statutes mechanics' liens for labor or material may be acquired either by persons in privity with the owner⁴⁹ or by persons not in privity with the owner,⁵⁰ but unless the prescribed notice is given the owner, as discussed infra § 121, privity between the owner and the claimant is essential to the establishment of the lien⁵¹ Where privity exists with the owner a lien is acquired by the performance of labor or the furnishing of materials on the property.⁵²

persons connected together or having a mutual interest in the same action or thing,⁵⁴ and implies special or particular knowledge, showing active consent or concurrence⁵⁵ It contemplates that there shall be a direct relationship between the owner and the lien claimant with respect to the furnishing of the materials or performance of labor so that a primary and direct liability on the part of the owner to pay for them will arise⁵⁶ Privity exists only when claimant in furnishing the materials or performing the labor has acted on the owner's obligation, express or implied, to pay therefor as a primary debtor,⁵⁷ and not as a secondary debtor or surety⁵⁸ Privity of contract between the owner and claimant must exist,⁵⁹ and it will not arise from mere knowledge on the part of the owner that claimant is performing labor for, or furnishing materials to, the contractor,⁶⁰ or from a relation of direct contractual privity between the contractor and the owner,⁶¹ or out of a requirement by the owner that the contractor pay for materials before the owner pay him⁶²

As arising from contract

It has been stated that those in privity with the owner are such as have a material or successive relationship with him to the same thing, right of action, or property which does not arise by contract between them, and that it may arise by contract or conveyance to them by others.—Anderson Mill & Lumber Co v Clements, 134 So. 588, 101 Fla. 523

Contractor's misapplication of payment

Fact that contractors, taking mortgage for contract price and assigning mortgage as security for loan as to be used for materials, did not so use funds obtained, will not entitle materialman to lien.—First Nat Bank v. Southern Lumber & Supply Co., supra.

§ 74. — Time and Place of Making

A mechanic's lien may be acquired under a contract made outside the state. Under various statutes the contract under which the lien arises must have been made before the work was done or materials were furnished in order that a mechanic's lien may be acquired either on property generally or on a homestead.

In the absence of a statutory provision to the contrary, a mechanic's lien may be acquired for work done or materials furnished pursuant to a contract made outside the state.⁶³ Under some statutes it has been held that a lien cannot be acquired for materials furnished or labor performed prior to the execution of the contract for the improvement pursuant to which they are furnished or performed⁶⁴ or prior to the execution of a written contract therefor,⁶⁵ but under other statutes a contract made after the work is finished may support the lien.⁶⁶

Homestead property. Under some statutes, in order to support a lien on a homestead, the contract must have been made before the work was done or the materials furnished,⁶⁷ and failure to comply with the requirements of the law cannot be waived or ratified by any contract made after the material is furnished or the labor done.⁶⁸ A contract for improvements on a homestead need not be executed by the husband and wife at the same time, but the wife's consent thereto may be to a contract already executed by the husband.⁶⁹

§ 75. — Necessity of Writing

It is not essential to the acquisition of a mechanic's lien, unless required by statute, that the contract for the improvement, or the owner's consent thereto, be in writing; but under various statutes the contract or consent is required to be in writing, either generally or in certain cases.

In the absence of an express statutory requirement it is not essential to the acquisition of a mechanic's lien that the contract with the owner under which the labor is performed or materials furnished shall be in writing.⁷⁰ Under various statutes, however, it is required that the contract be in writing, either generally⁷¹ or in certain cases, as where the amount to be paid under the contract exceeds a specified sum.⁷²

There can be no mechanic's lien apart from small claims for personal labor except for labor and material furnished by virtue of written contract—Lampasona v Capriotti, 4

Where, as discussed supra § 52, the consent of the owner to the improvement is sufficient to support a mechanic's lien, under some statutes such consent must be in writing.⁷³ Such statutes, either expressly or by construction, have been held to require the written consent of the owner where the labor is performed or the materials are furnished at the request of, or under a contract with, another person,⁷⁴ such as a lessee⁷⁵ or vendee under an executory contract to purchase.⁷⁶ Where, however, a statute grants a lien on the improvements separate from the real estate, the written consent of the lessor has been held unnecessary to the validity of the lien.⁷⁷

Homestead. Under the constitutional or statutory provisions of some jurisdictions a written contract is necessary where it is sought to subject a homestead to a lien.⁷⁸

band and wife,⁷⁹ such as realty held by them as tenants by the entirety⁸⁰ or under an executory contract to purchase,⁸¹ but in other jurisdictions the rule is otherwise.⁸²

Separate property of married woman. Under some statutes,⁸³ but not other statutes,⁸⁴ a contract in writing is necessary where it is sought to reach the separate property of a married woman, and under some statutes, where the contract for the improvement is made by the husband, the wife's consent thereto must be in writing in order that a lien may be acquired.⁸⁵

§ 76. — Description of Land

Where a statute so requires, the land on which the improvement is to be erected or on which the work is to be done must be specified or described.

dence alunde the contract must be relied on in order to identify the property to be charged, that the contract is too general and indefinite to enable a lien to be acquired, at least as against third persons.⁸⁷ A contract is sufficient, however, if enough appears therein to identify the property,⁸⁸ and there is authority which holds that an omission or misdescription may be cured by a correct description in the petition⁸⁹ or an admission in the answer.⁹⁰ The contract need not describe the land in the absence of statutory requirement.⁹¹

Although it is required under some statutes, under others it is unnecessary that the contract should describe in detail the improvement, labor, and materials for which a mechanic's lien is sought.

Under some statutes contracts have been held insufficient for vagueness and indefiniteness with respect to the improvement to be made,⁹² the material to be furnished,⁹³ or the labor to be performed,⁹⁴ especially where it was sought to establish the lien as against a mortgage given after the making of the contract but before the performance of the labor or the furnishing of the material.⁹⁵ Under other statutes, however, it is not necessary that the contract should describe in detail the work to be done and the improvements or repairs to be made,⁹⁶ and there is no requirement that the contract should be for a specific amount of labor or quantity of material,⁹⁷ or that the kind of materials to be used in making a contemplated improvement or portion thereof,⁹⁸ or every item furnished⁹⁹ should be specifically named at the time of making the contract. Some,¹ but not other,² authorities consider the plans and specifications essential parts of the contract. The failure to file specifications for a portion of buildings constructed for a tenant whose lease prohibits the imposition of mechanic's liens on the land will not enable the contractor to acquire a lien, where he had actual or constructive knowledge of the prohibition against liens contained in the lease.³

§ 78. — Amount to Be Paid

Under some, but not all, statutes, in order that a lien may be acquired, the contract for the improvement must fix the amount due or to become due or provide for its ascertainment with certainty.

Under some statutes, in order that a lien may be acquired, the amount due or to become due must be fixed in the contract⁴ although the prices for the various items need not be set forth in the written contract,⁵ or the contract must be of such character and on such terms and stipulations between the parties that the amount which may be earned under it may in some way be ascertained and determined with precision and certainty.⁶ However, in other jurisdictions a lien may be enforced, although a definite amount to be paid was not expressly agreed on⁷ or stated in the contract.⁸

held that there can be no lien for a quantum meruit performance in the execution of a contract for improvements on a homestead unless there is such an express provision in the written contract providing for the lien;⁹ but there is substantial authority to the effect that a lien claimant who has justifiably abandoned full performance of his contract is entitled to a lien for the reasonable value of the work and materials furnished, as discussed infra § 175

§ 79. — Terms; Time of Payment or Performance

Where a statute so requires, the contract must set forth the terms thereof, or the time of payment or performance, in order for a mechanic's lien to be acquired. Under some statutes the contract must provide for payment of the contract price in installments at specified times and in certain per cents or persons other than the contractor who perform labor or furnish materials may acquire a lien for the value thereof.

A statute requiring, in the case of a homestead, a contract in writing, setting forth the terms thereof,¹⁰ means that the essentials of the contract shall be included in the written instrument,¹¹ and compliance with such requirement has been held sufficient where the essential elements of parties, consideration, and subject matter appear on the face of the contract, even though in somewhat general terms.¹² Under some statutes the written contract must set out the date when the work is to be finished, and failure to do this prevents the lien from attaching.¹³ The fact that the contractor agrees to give credit for a part of the contract price does not prevent him from acquiring a lien for the balance.¹⁴

Installments. Under the provisions of some statutes the contract price must by the terms of the contract be made payable in installments at specified

times after the commencement of the work or on the completion of specified portions of the work or of the whole work,¹⁵ and a certain part of the contract price must be made payable not earlier than a designated number of days after the final completion of the contract,¹⁶ and unless the contract conforms substantially to these requirements persons other than the contractor who perform labor or furnish materials have a lien for the value thereof irrespective of the contract price.¹⁷

Contracts payable otherwise than in money. The right of a person who furnishes labor or materials pursuant to a contract with the owner to enforce a mechanic's lien is not affected by the fact that by the terms of the contract the price was to be paid otherwise than in money, where the owner refuses to pay in the manner agreed on.¹⁸

Nonlienable items cannot be rendered lienable by inclusion in a contract with lienable items; and, although a lien may be acquired for lienable items under a severable contract which contains both lienable and nonlienable items, in the absence of a statute providing otherwise a lien may not be acquired where the contract is an entirety and indivisible.

A nonlienable item cannot be rendered lienable by including it in a contract with other items which are lienable.¹⁹ Furthermore a lien cannot be acquired under a contract which includes both lienable and nonlienable items where the contract is an entirety, for a gross sum, and is not divisible.²⁰ However, even though the contract includes both lienable and nonlienable items, a lien may be acquired for the lienable items where the contract is severable and not an entirety,²¹ where there are separate and distinct agreements, although embodied in the same writing,²² where the contract, although an entire one, does not specify the price to be paid for the whole,²³ or where, even though the contract is an entirety and for an entire price, a statute provides that in such case a lien may be acquired for the lienable items involved²⁴

§ 81. — Signature and Authentication

Under various constitutional or statutory provisions the contract necessary to the establishment of a mechanic's lien must be signed by the owner of the premises sought to be charged, and in order to fix a lien on their homestead both husband and wife must sign the contract and the wife privily acknowledge it.

Under statutes which require an express agreement or contract between the lien claimant and the owner of property charged as a prerequisite to the establishment of a mechanic's lien, discussed generally supra § 73 a, it has been held that such an agreement does not exist until it is signed by the owner,²⁵ although under some statutes a contract signed by the reputed owner is sufficient.²⁶

Homestead property. In order to fix a mechanic's lien on a homestead it is required under some constitutional and statutory provisions that the contract be signed by both husband and wife²⁷ and be privily acknowledged by the wife²⁸ before the labor or material is furnished.²⁹ Under such a statutory requirement an acknowledgment of the contract after part performance will not create a lien for labor and material previously put into the improvement;³⁰ but it will give a right to a lien for that which is subsequently done or furnished³¹ except where the contract is an entirety, as where it calls for payment of a lump sum for a completed improvement.³² Where the lien contract is signed and acknowledged by husband and wife in the required statutory manner, the fact that the wife is ignorant of the effect of the contract after having had it fully explained to her will not prevent the lien from attaching to the homestead.³³

Joint property of husband and wife. Under some statutes it is essential to the acquisition of a lien on land owned jointly by husband and wife that both sign the contract.³⁴

Married woman's separate estate. Under some statutes, in order for a lien to be obtained on a married woman's separate estate, the contract for the improvements must be signed by the wife.³⁵

Liening lien to principal contractor. - d Effect

a. In General

Under various mechanics' lien statutes the filing or recording of contracts for alterations, improvements, or repairs, or of specified contracts therefor, is required

In some states the filing or recording of the contract is, or at times has been, provided for by statute³⁸ The application of such statutes depends on the wording of the particular statute and the construction placed thereon³⁹ Particular statutes are variously held to apply where there is a contract in writing⁴⁰ signed by the record owner⁴¹ in the possession of claimant,⁴² where the contract price exceeds a specified amount,⁴³ or where it is sought to fix a lien on a homestead,⁴⁴ and not to apply to a contract contained in an ordinary lease⁴⁵ or to a writing merely authorizing a person to act as agent⁴⁶ In some jurisdictions the statutes relating to the filing or recording of the contract do not apply to the contracts of subcontractors⁴⁷ or materialman,⁴⁸ while in other jurisdictions the statutes apply to contracts of persons other than the original contractor,⁴⁹ such as a subcontractor,⁵⁰ but do not apply to the contract of the original contractor.⁵¹

b. Time and Place

There must be a compliance with requirements of mechanics' lien statutes as to the place and time for the filing of contracts for alterations, improvements, or repairs.

The statutes of different jurisdictions variously provide, or at times have provided, for the filing or recording of the contract in the office of the county recorder,⁵² county clerk,⁵³ or clerk of the county court,⁵⁴ or in the registry of deeds.⁵⁵ Where the statute provides that the contract shall be recorded "in a book kept for that purpose," it is not necessary that it should be recorded in a book kept exclusively for that purpose.⁵⁶ A recording in a deed book has been held sufficient under some statutes.⁵⁷ Some statutes contemplate a filing before the work is commenced or materials are furnished.⁵⁸ Other statutes require a filing not later than a prescribed period of time after the accrual of the indebtedness.⁵⁹ Where an express lien is given by the contract, it has been held that it need not be recorded within the time prescribed by statute.⁶⁰

c. Papers to Be Filed or Recorded

(1) In general

(2) Pleas and specifications

(1) In General

In order to comply with a requirement of mechanics' lien statutes for the filing or recording of the contract, the instrument filed or recorded must be a real, valid contract for a construction or improvement, and the one under which the improvement is carried out. Under some statutes, instead of the original contract, a duplicate, memorandum, or notice thereof may be filed.

The contract to be filed or recorded is the one which embodies a real, rather than a fictitious, agreement between an owner and a contractor for the erection of a building by the latter,⁶¹ which truly recites the terms of the agreement⁶² and by virtue of which the work is done or the materials furnished,⁶³ and it must be a contract for a construction or improvement, not a sale.⁶⁴ The contract need not be acknowledged in order to be entitled to record under some statutes.⁶⁵

Provision is made under some statutes, as an alternative to the filing or recording of the original contract, for the filing or recording of a duplicate⁶⁶ or memorandum⁶⁷ of the contract, or as much of the contract as shows the contract price and the times of its payment.⁶⁸ The contract or memorandum filed must conform to, and contain all the terms and provisions prescribed by, statute or the filing will be without effect.⁶⁹

§ 84. Statutory Notice by Owner of Non-responsibility

a In general

b Application of statutes

a. In General

Under various statutes the estate or property of an owner who has knowledge of the construction of improvements thereon by third persons is subject to a mechanic's lien therefor unless within a specified time after obtaining such knowledge he files or posts a specified notice of nonresponsibility.

Under some statutes, where the owner knows that buildings are being erected or improvements are being made on his property,⁹ or where he receives due

Power of legislature

The legislature may provide that improvements made with the knowledge of the landowner shall be deemed to have been made at his instance unless he disclaims responsibility therefor in the manner and within the time prescribed by the statute—Knoff Woodwork Co v Zotalis, 6 NW 2d 264, 213 Minn 204.

Purpose of statute

(1) The statute was enacted for the protection of the owner—Gabriel Powder & Supply Co v Thompson, 97 P 2d 182, 163 Or 623.

(2) The purpose of the statute is to give actual notice to workmen or materialmen that the owner of the property disclaims responsibility for liens on it for their services or supplies—Milner v Shuey, 60 P 2d 604, 57 Nev 159, modified on other grounds 69 P 2d 771, 57 Nev 159—Didier v Webster Mines Corporation, 234 P 520, 49 Nev 5—Phillips v Snowden Placer Co, 160 P 786, 40 Nev 66.

(3) The statute was also intended to take each case out of the realms of uncertainty which could arise from conflicting or unsatisfactory evidence as to the fact of claimant's knowledge of the owner's disclaimer of responsibility—Milner v Shuey, supra.

(4) Statements of other purposes see 40 C J p 125 note 3 [a].

Object of notice

The object of the notice is to bring home to those who are expending labor or materials on a building the fact that the owner of the land will not be responsible for such labor or materials—English v Olympic Auditorium, 20 P 2d 946, 217 Cal 631, 87 A L R 1281—Hayward Lumber & Investment Co v Ford, 148 P 2d 689, 64 Cal App 3d 346.

or written notice that material will be furnished or labor done,¹⁰ his estate is subject to a mechanic's lien unless within a specified time after obtaining such knowledge he gives notice that he will not be responsible therefor. It is expressly provided by some of the statutes that, where the owner, with knowledge of the improvement, fails to give the prescribed notice, the improvement shall be held to have been made at his instance or request or by his authority,¹¹ as far as to subject his interest to liens.¹² Such statutes have no bearing on the question of personal liability for the labor performed or material furnished.¹³ Some courts state that a lien under such statutes does not grow out of contract¹⁴ but arises from estoppel,¹⁵ and that the statute does no more than furnish a rule of evidence whereby the owner's consent or acquiescence may be determined.¹⁶ Other courts, however, have expressed the opinion that the lien created by such statutes is not founded on estoppel,¹⁷ but rather on the presumption of consent¹⁸ or authorization¹⁹ raised by the statute on failure of the owner to give the prescribed notice after acquiring knowledge that the improvement is being made. Some statutes expressly provide that the owner's failure to give the prescribed notice shall constitute ratification of the contract.²⁰ Under the various statutes the legal effect of a failure of the owner to give notice after acquiring knowledge is, as far as a lien is concerned, the same as though he had expressly and affirmatively authorized, contracted for, or consented to the making of the improvement.²¹

b. Application of Statutes

- (1) In general
- (2) Knowledge
- (3) Compliance with statutes

(1) In General

Statutes subjecting an owner's interest to mechanics' liens for improvements on his property unless he gives notice of nonresponsibility therefor apply to an owner who has knowledge of, but who has not authorized or caused, the improvement, and not to one whose interest in the property is as a lienor or encumbrancer, or to an owner who has contracted for the improvement or otherwise caused it to be made.

The statutes under consideration apply to a person who has not authorized the improvement²² or caused it to be made,²³ but who has knowledge of the making of the improvement, as discussed infra subdivision b (2) of this section, and is the owner²⁴ of the legal title to,²⁵ or has an interest in,²⁶ the

Legal title not required

It is not necessary that the owner shall have the legal title in order to come within the provisions of the statute; equitable ownership is sufficient—Bankers' Building & Loan land otherwise than as a lienor or encumbrancer.²⁷ They do not apply to a person who causes the building to be constructed²⁸ or who contracts for the improvement,²⁹ directly or indirectly,³⁰ or to a participating owner, even though acting through his agent,³¹ or to one at whose instance the improvement is in fact made.³² In such case the interest of such a person is liable to a mechanic's lien under other statutes, and he cannot relieve such interest from liability by giving the statutory notice that he will not be responsible.³³ However, a few statutes of this nature have been construed to refer only to an owner who has become liable under other statutes³⁴ and wishes to terminate his liability³⁵ and prevent it from extending to labor or material furnished after the giving of the notice.³⁶

The notice will preclude the acquisition of a lien against the land or interest therein of the owner filing the notice,³⁷ but it will not prevent the acquisition of a lien against the improvement itself.³⁸

Lienable character of work repairs and improvements by lessee. It is essential to the application of the statutes that the work done shall be of a lienable character,³⁹ but provisions in a lease as to the character of, and the right to remove, improvements or additions to be made by the lessee will not prevent their application so as to preclude a claimant without actual or constructive knowledge of such lease provision from acquiring a mechanic's lien on the lessor's estate.⁴⁰ While by virtue of express provisions of some statutes they do not apply to the lessor in respect of repairs made by, or at the instance of, the lessee,⁴¹ under such statutes a mechanic's lien attaches to the lessor's interest for improvements other than repairs unless, after acquiring knowledge that they are being made, he protects himself in the manner prescribed by statute.⁴²

Husband and wife. Under various statutes, some expressly so providing, contracts by one spouse for improvements on property owned by the other or by both bind the estate of the other so as to make it subject to mechanics' liens therefor,⁴³ or in such case the contracting spouse is presumed to be the agent of the other, or the wife is deemed to have consented to the improvement,⁴⁴ unless such noncontracting spouse gives notice objecting to the improvement in the manner provided by statute.

Lessors and lessees. The statutes apply to a lessor⁴⁵ unless he has entered into a contract with reference to the improvement,⁴⁶ or has caused the improvement to be made through the lessee as his agent,⁴⁷ or the improvement is made at his instance⁴⁸ Where the building of the improvement is optional with the lessee, the posting and filing of the notice of nonresponsibility by the lessor relieves the land from the lien, but the improvement itself is subject to the lien⁴⁹

Partners The statutes have been held to apply to a partner at whose instance a building was erected for the partnership on land owned by himself and another as cotenants⁵⁰

Vendors and vendees mortgagees or other lienholders Although there is some authority to the contrary,⁵¹ the statutes have generally been held to apply to a vendor under an executory contract of sale⁵² even though the purchaser does not have the right of possession.⁵³ On the other hand, the statutes do not apply to the holder of a vendor's lien⁵⁴ or a mortgagee,⁵⁵ but it has been held otherwise as to the holder of a deed of trust given to secure a debt,⁵⁶ especially where, by virtue of an agreement between the parties, the improvement is to be made as a joint enterprise and both are in fact interested in the property⁵⁷

(2) Knowledge

In order to subject an owner's estate to a mechanic's lien because of his failure to give a prescribed notice of nonresponsibility for improvements thereon, he must have knowledge of the fact of construction of the particular improvement involved, and not merely of the intent to construct it; the knowledge may be either actual or constructive and may be imputed to the owner from the knowledge of an authorized agent

Knowledge on the part of the owner or person having an interest in the property is necessary in order to render applicable the statutes under consideration,⁵⁸ which knowledge, it has been held under some statutes, must be of a degree similar to that present in an estoppel⁵⁹ The knowledge required is knowledge of the particular improvement involved, not knowledge of a different improvement,⁶⁰ but it has been held that adjoining landowners need not have actual knowledge of the exact character or location as to their different properties of an improvement constituting in law one structure which is placed on their properties⁶¹

It is not required that the owner have actual,⁶² absolute,⁶³ or full and detailed⁶⁴ knowledge, or that he actually see the work in progress⁶⁵ It is sufficient if he has constructive knowledge,⁶⁶ that is, notice of such facts and circumstances as would put a prudent man on inquiry as to the nature and extent of the work being done.⁶⁷ This knowledge may be acquired through the provisions of a lease or sales contract as to intended construction,⁶⁸ and acceptance of the work conclusively establishes knowledge thereof.⁶⁹ It has been held, however, under some of the statutes that knowledge of the fact of construction is necessary⁷⁰ and that knowledge merely of an intention to construct is not sufficient.⁷¹

Knowledge of agent Knowledge on the part of an agent of the owner possessing general authority in respect of the property, or the interest of the owner therein, is chargeable to the owner,⁷² provided it relates to facts within the scope of the agent's authority.⁷³ Knowledge of a broker who leased the premises⁷⁴ or of an agent to collect the rent⁷⁵ cannot be imputed to the owner. Also the knowledge of the husband of the owner is not notice to her in the absence of evidence that he is her agent.⁷⁶ In the case of a corporation, knowledge on the part of an officer,⁷⁷ agent,⁷⁸ or general manager,⁷⁹ but not the knowledge of a director,⁸⁰ is attributable to it.

(3) Compliance with Statutes

Strict compliance with the statutory requirements as to the posting and filing or recording of a notice of nonresponsibility, including those relating to its form, content, time of posting, and the manner and duration thereof, is required in order for it to prevent the acquisition of a mechanic's lien against an owner's property or estate.

Strict compliance with a statute of the character under consideration is necessary to relieve an owner from responsibility in a case falling within its terms,⁸¹ and such compliance will prevent the acquisition of a lien on his property.⁸² Under statutes so providing the notice must be a written notice,⁸³ in which case an oral notice is insufficient.⁸⁴ The notice must contain the information required by statute.⁸⁵

notice is posted and recorded with reference to a particular structure it will not relieve the owner's property from a lien for the construction of a different building, which is constructed at a later time by a different person, and of which the owner had no knowledge at the time of posting the notice.⁸⁷ However, one notice for each structure, improvement, or work is sufficient,⁸⁸ it is not necessary for the owner to post a notice of nonresponsibility after the delivery of materials or the performance of work by every lien claimant.⁸⁹

Manner and duration of posting. The usual requirement is that a notice of nonresponsibility shall be posted in a conspicuous place in the building or on the property.⁹⁰ Under some statutes the notice must be kept posted during the performance of the labor or the furnishing of the materials,⁹¹ but under others that is not required.⁹² Under the latter statutes it must be so posted that under ordinary conditions it will remain displayed for a reasonable length of time.⁹³ It is insufficient if it is so posted that it will be destroyed prior to the claimant's employment,⁹⁴ but it is sufficient if the notice is posted in good faith with the intent and purpose that it shall remain as long as the notice would remain in a place of that nature under ordinary conditions.⁹⁵

Time of posting. The notice prescribed by statute may be given on any day the work is in progress,⁹⁶ provided it is given within the prescribed statutory time,⁹⁷ but if not given within such time it is not effective for any purpose.⁹⁸ Ordinarily the period of time within which an effective notice may be posted, the length of which varies according to the terms of the different statutes, is a specified time after the owner obtains knowledge of the construction,⁹⁹ even though such information was not obtained until after its completion,¹ and not from the time he obtains knowledge of any part or stage of it,² or from the time of the claimant's filing notice of claim of lien,³ or notice that a lien may be claimed.⁴

The period for posting the notice must be measured from the time knowledge of actual, not intended, construction is obtained where the only statutory period specified is one after obtaining knowledge of the construction,⁵ and, even where the pe-

Adjoining landowners

Where tenant's construction of improvement on adjoining lots of different owners constitutes in law a single structure, although composed of different buildings, the time within which the owner of a particular lot may file a notice of nonresponsibility dates from the time he obtained knowledge of the commencement of the building operations and not from the time he obtained knowledge of the commencement of building operations on his property—Hammond Lumber Co v Goldberg, supra.

Knowledge of intent to construct
The posting of notice of nonresponsibility prior to the commence-

riod specified is one after obtaining knowledge of the construction or the intended construction, a notice posted within the specified time after obtaining knowledge of the actual construction is sufficient, although it is not within the specified period if measured from the time the owner obtained knowledge of the intent to construct the improvement⁶

Filing or recording Under some statutes, in order to relieve his property from a lien, the owner, in addition to posting a notice of nonresponsibility, must also file or record a verified or duplicate copy thereof in a specified county office⁷ within a specified time after it has been posted⁸ The filing of such a copy, however, will not give the required notice where the posting of the notice was not effective⁹

on which he claims a lien¹⁰ or that the owner intends or desires to avail himself of the exemption offered by the statute¹¹ is not sufficient to debar him from the enforcement of his lien against the estate of an owner who failed to give the prescribed notice of nonresponsibility, at least in the absence of circumstances sufficient to create an estoppel against him.¹²

Subject to statutory restrictions,¹³ the principal contract under which a mechanic's lien may arise may be assigned,¹⁴ and an assignment of the owner's note for the contract price and the mechanic's lien securing it gives the assignee no greater rights than the assignor had¹⁵ Liens arising under me-

Giving of bond

A statute prohibiting the assignment by a contractor of the proceeds of the contract to the detriment of subcontractors, journeymen, laborers, and materialmen, unless bond is issued in accordance with the statute, has been held to be valid—Hartford Accident & Indemnity Co v Natchez Inv. 14. Fraud in obtaining vendor's written consent to the improvement, which does not go to the execution of the instrument, will not preclude an assignee of the contractor from obtaining and enforcing a mechanic's lien against the property—B & D Investment Co v. Peters, 274 Ill App 500

What constitutes assignment

(1) General contractor's delivery of notes and bonds secured by deed of trust constituted assignment of amount due—De Witt v Coffey, 143 SE 710, 150 Va 365

(2) Contractor's assignment of owner's note and mechanic's lien securing it constitutes assignment of entire amount due under contract where note evidences full contract price due—Garvin v Armstrong Bros, Tex Civ App, 20 SW 2d 358, modified on other grounds Modern Plumbing Co v Armstrong Bros, Com App, 36 SW 2d 1011

(3) Contractor's assignment of owner's note evidencing moneys payable under contract and of mechanic's lien securing note does not constitute assignment of entire contract where he retains right and obligation to perform contract—Gollnick v Fry, 23 SW 2d 677, 119 Tex 23—Modern Plumbing Co v Armstrong Bros, Tex Com App, 36 SW 2d 1011

Claims not defeated

(2) Rights of surety and labor and material claimants in balance of unpaid contract price represented by owner's note is not affected by fact that bank to whom contractor assigned note expended a portion of price it agreed to pay contractor for note in carrying on work after contractor abandoned it—American Employers' Ins Co v. Roddy, supra

Conditions

Where payment of the note is conditioned on proof that all bills for labor and material have been paid, it inures to the benefit of unpaid labor and lien claimants—American Employers' Ins Co v. Roddy, supra

Priority between assignees

Building contractor's unrecorded assignment to surety of all deferred payments and retained per cents due under contract gives surety priority over bank, which subsequently, without notice, took assignment of property owner's note for the contract price and mechanic's lien securing it—American Employers' Ins Co v Roddy, supra

Consent to subsequent assignment

Surety's consent to contractor's assignment of note for final installment on building contract could not militate against surety's right to same fund under prior assignment chanics' and materialmen's lien contracts have been held not to be subject to attack in the hands of an innocent purchaser for value because of the inclusion of improper items in the principal of the note secured.¹⁶ Materialmen have been held to have no claim to payment out of a lien note executed by the owner and transferred to a different materialman who furnished materials and advanced cash to the contractor in excess of the total amount due by the owner to the contractor.¹⁷ Under some statutes provision is made for recording an assignment of money due or to become due or for recording orders for the payment of money against funds in the hands of the owner.¹⁸

A contractor's assignment to a materialman of a stated sum from the amount due under the contract has been held to impose no duty on the owner to pay the materialman more than such amount and to fix no lien on the property for the amount assigned,¹⁹ and it is not good as against sums required to complete the building after the contractor has abandoned the work, where a statute limits mechanics' liens to the amount due by the owner to the contractor and subordinates such liens to any amount expended by the owner for the completion of the contract after failure of the contractor to do so.²⁰

Where the original contractor incorporates during the performance of the contract, materialmen who furnish materials to the original contractor or to his corporate successor, or to both, have been held entitled to mechanics' liens for the materials furnished.²¹

Failure to file contract. The failure to file the contract will not affect the rights and liabilities of an assignee of the contractor, since, as his position is the same as that of the original contractor, he is deemed to have had notice of the contract provisions.²²

Who may be assignee. An assignee of a building contractor or a surety on a contractor's bond may be a successor in interest to the contractor, but the interest of the owner of the building is adverse to that of the contractor.²³

D. PERSONS ENTITLED TO LIEN

classes of persons,²⁵ other statutes, especially the later ones, are more extensive in scope,²⁶ and the protection accorded by them is not confined exclusively to "mechanics" in the strict sense of that term²⁷ or to persons who may be supposed to need the special protection of the state²⁸ Indeed, some of the statutes confer a lien on "any person" who has performed or furnished labor or furnished material, irrespective of whether the lienor is the general contractor or subcontractor, or simply a laborer or materialman.²⁹ Other statutes, including the earlier ones, enumerate the classes of persons entitled to the lien, such as artisans,³⁰ builders,³¹ carpenters,³² cartmen,³³ founders,³⁴ journeymen,³⁵ machinists,³⁶ masons,³⁷ and undertakers.³⁸

It has been held that the codification or substantial reenactment of prior laws which employs a specific enumeration rather than the prior general designation does not reduce or limit the classes of persons entitled to the lien.³⁹ It has also been held that, while a statute specifically enumerating certain classes of persons refers primarily to the persons designated,⁴⁰ it also embraces a person who buys the labor and material which enters into the improvement.⁴¹

Lien in two capacities Sometimes the same person is held entitled to a lien in two capacities.⁴²

§ 87. Mechanics

A mechanic, within the meaning of the lien statutes, is a person skilled in the practical use of tools; a workman who shapes and applies material in the building of a house or other structure mentioned in the statutes; a person who performs manual labor.

Some statutes and constitutions expressly confer the right to a lien on mechanics.⁴³ A mechanic, within the meaning of such statutes, is a person skilled in the practical use of tools,⁴⁴ a workman who shapes and applies material in the building of a house or other structures mentioned in the statutes,⁴⁵ a person who performs manual labor.⁴⁶ The term has been held not to include contractors,⁴⁷ subcontractors,⁴⁸ or a person who, although a mechanic by trade, contracts to do the work in question otherwise than in the capacity of a mechanic,⁴⁹ neither does the term include persons who merely sell, furnish, or supply materials⁵⁰ or machinery⁵¹ or who furnish materials to another materialman.⁵²

Under some statutes a mechanic is entitled to a lien for materials bought by him and placed in position on the premises, where the services of the mechanic were necessary in order to put up and fit together the articles so purchased, for the use for which they were intended.⁵³ While it has been held that the proprietor of a sawmill is in no sense a mechanic,⁵⁴ the contrary has been held with respect to a person who owns a sawmill and machinery, and works therein, not as a mere speculator or buyer and seller of lumber, but in shaping and fitting lumber to be useful as materials in a building.⁵⁵

§ 88. Laborers

The mechanics' lien statutes variously confer a lien on laborers, workmen, or any person performing work and labor.

The mechanics' lien statutes variously confer a lien on laborers,⁵⁶ workmen,⁵⁷ or any person performing work and labor.⁵⁸ A laborer, within the meaning of such statutes, is a person who performs labor⁵⁹ or manual labor,⁶⁰ or the main ingredient of whose services is physical toil.⁶¹ A mechanic,⁶² a plasterer,⁶³ and a teamster⁶⁴ have been held to be laborers within the statute.

On the other hand, the term "laborer" does not include a person who simply sells or furnishes material,⁶⁵ a superintendent of a mill,⁶⁶ or a person employed to act as clerk and make himself generally useful.⁶⁷ Also some courts hold that a contractor personally performing manual labor is not entitled to a lien as a laborer,⁶⁸ and that a subcontractor is not included in the term "laborer."⁶⁹ However, other courts interpret the term "laborer," as used in mechanics' lien legislation, to include contractors⁷⁰ and subcontractors.⁷¹ The term "laborer" or "laborers," as used in mechanics' lien statutes, includes one who performs labor for day's wages.⁷²

§ 89. Materialmen

Ordinarily a materialman, within the meaning of the statutes, is a person who does not follow the business of building or contracting to build homes for others, but who manufactures, purchases, or keeps for sale materials which enter into buildings, and who sells or furnishes such materials without performing any work or labor in installing or putting them in place.

While a materialman has been held not to come within some early mechanics' lien statutes restricted to particular classes of persons and not expressly mentioning a materialman,⁷³ nevertheless many statutes, especially the later ones, expressly confer a lien on a materialman⁷⁴ or a person furnishing materials,⁷⁵ and this is true in some jurisdictions where former statutes denied, or greatly restricted, the lien of a materialman⁷⁶. The rights of materialmen are fixed by law⁷⁷ and nothing that the owner can do can change them⁷⁸. Ordinarily a materialman, within the meaning of the statutes, is a person who does not follow the business of building or contracting to build homes for others,⁷⁹ but who manufactures,⁸⁰ purchases,⁸¹ or keeps for sale⁸² materials which enter into buildings, and who sells or furnishes such materials⁸³ without performing any work or labor in installing or putting them in place,⁸⁴ the materials being incorporated in, or attached to, real estate by the labor of others⁸⁵.

According to some,⁸⁶ but not other,⁸⁷ authorities the term "materialman" may include a person who not only sells the materials, but also furnishes the labor necessary to install them, at least where the labor furnished is slight in comparison with the value of the materials. Also a builder and contractor who keeps a warehouse of material for sale to other builders and contractors may be a materialman and entitled to a lien as such for material furnished when it goes into a building being constructed by someone other than himself.⁸⁸ A person is entitled to a lien for materials sold and furnished by him directly to the owner, rather than the contractor, on the promise of the owner to pay therefor.⁸⁹ While a person who merely pays for materials furnished by others,⁹⁰ or who merely guarantees payment of materials purchased by another,⁹¹ is not entitled to a lien for materials furnished, it has been held that a person has sufficient interest in the materials to entitle him to a lien as a materialman where, on the shipment of material to him, he pays the draft of the shipper and delivers the materials on the request of the owner and contractor.⁹² An owner of a mill who saws lumber from timber of another, under a contract with the latter to be paid for the sawing, and who delivers the lumber to the owner of the land or his agent, by whom it is used in the improvement of the owner's real estate, does not occupy the position of a materialman.⁹³

(2) It has also been held, however, that labor paid for by a materialman cannot be treated as part of the price for the material—Bell v Koontz, 290 SW 597, 172 Ark 870—40 C.J. p 130 note 51.

Contractors and subcontractors distinguished. Under some statutes a materialman or person furnishing material is deemed to be either a contractor⁹⁴ or a subcontractor⁹⁵ accordingly as he does or does not contract directly with the owner, and to be entitled to a lien only when he occupies the position of a contractor⁹⁶ or subcontractor.⁹⁷ Also under some statutes the liens of contractors and materialmen are deemed to be of the same character⁹⁸ and governed by the same principles of law.⁹⁹ Under other statutes, however, the courts recognize a clear distinction between materialmen and contractors¹ or subcontractors.² They hold that in order to be entitled to a lien a materialman need not be a contractor³ or subcontractor⁴ for the erection or repair of the building, that a person is not a "contractor," within the meaning of the statute, by reason of the fact that he is under contract to sell or furnish materials,⁵ that a person selling materials to a contractor is not made a subcontractor by reason of the contract involved in the sale,⁶ and that the mere knowledge on the part of a person selling material to a contractor that it is to be used in the performance of a certain contract between the owner and the contractor does not make him a subcontractor.⁷

In various cases a particular person has been held by the court to be a materialman and not a contractor⁸ or subcontractor,⁹ or not to be a materialman but rather a contractor¹⁰ or subcontractor.¹¹ In some jurisdictions the test applied in determining whether a person is a materialman, on the one hand, or a contractor or subcontractor, on the other hand, is whether he furnishes material only or labor and material combined.¹² However, in other jurisdictions, where a person may be a materialman even though he installs or puts the materials in place, the test sometimes applied is whether the value of the labor supplied in putting the materials in place is small in comparison with the value of the material,¹³ but it has also been held that something more than this is necessary to a determination of the status of a lien claimant,¹⁴ and that a person who, under an agreement with the contractor, and with material furnished by himself, erects a definite part of a building or structure is a subcontractor within the meaning of the statutes, regardless of the comparative cost of labor and material.¹⁵

§ 90. Contractors in General

As used in mechanics' lien statutes the term "contractor" has a restricted meaning. A contractor, or principal contractor, or original contractor, within such statutes, is a person who contracts directly with the owner of the property to erect or construct a building or other structure or improvement or any main division or part thereof.

While the rule was otherwise under a few early statutes,¹⁶ under the more modern mechanics' lien statutes the contractor is usually entitled to a lien.¹⁷ Although in a general sense, a contractor is any person who enters into a contract, as used in mechanics' lien statutes the term has a restricted meaning.¹⁸ However, some courts have held that the term "original contractor" employed in the statutes is used in its usual sense¹⁹ as designating a person who for a fixed price agrees to perform certain work for some other person.²⁰ A contractor, or principal contractor, or original contractor, within the meaning of such statutes, is a person who contracts directly with the owner of the property²¹ to erect or construct a building or other structure or improvement²² or any main division or part thereof.²³ Some statutes expressly define the term "contractor" as used therein.²⁴

Particular statutory definitions

(1) "One who, by contract or agreement, express or implied, with the owner or the one who acts for the owner, plans or superintends the structure or other improvement or any part thereof, or furnishes labor, skill or superintendence thereto, or supplies or hauls materials reasonably necessary for and actually used therein, or any or all of them, whether as an architect, superintendent, builder or material man"—Smith-Paris Co, for Use of Keasbey & Mattison v Jameson Memorial Hospital Ass'n, 169 A. 233, 234, 313 Pa 254—40 C.J. p 132 note 96 [a] (1).

The term "contractor" as used in the mechanics' lien statutes does not include a lessee,²⁵ vendor,²⁶ or vendee²⁷ of real property who is making improvements thereon, or an insurance company which elects, under the policy of insurance, to repair buildings damaged by fire,²⁸ nor does the term "original contractor" include a day laborer²⁹ or a journeyman³⁰. The fact that a contract, instead of being for a stipulated sum, is what is known as a "cost plus" contract does not convert the person contracting with the owner into an agent³¹ or disentitle him to a lien as a contractor³². Also the fact that the contractor does not pay for quite all the material purchased and furnished by him does not change his relation to the owner into one of agency³³.

"Subcontractors" distinguished It sometimes becomes of vital importance to determine whether the lien claimant or the person with whom he contracted stands in the position of a contractor or a subcontractor³⁴. Particular persons have been held to be contractors, principal contractors, or original contractors, and not subcontractors,³⁵ or to be subcontractors and not contractors or principal contractors³⁶. The definitions of a contractor as a person who contracts with the owner and of a subcontractor as a person who contracts directly with the principal contractor point out one ground of distinction between a contractor and a subcontractor³⁷. A company employed by a general contractor acting as the agent of the owner has been held a contractor and not a subcontractor³⁸. It has been held that, where two or more persons who have jointly, as original contractors, entered into a contract to erect a building agree between themselves that each shall do a particular portion of the work and receive a specified part of the compensation, this makes each of them a subcontractor under the original contract³⁹ although it does not release them from their joint liability for the due performance of their contract,⁴⁰ but other cases have held that they remain principal contractors for all purposes and do not become subcontractors by reason of such agreement⁴¹.

Where, after a contract for the erection of a house for an entire sum has been executed, the contractor takes another person into partnership with himself in the mason work but not in the other work, and the owner makes no agreement with the new firm, it has been held that as to the mason work the partnership is a subcontractor⁴². The mere fact that a building contract with relation to property held in the names of the individual partners is made with the firm does not show that the contractor is a subcontractor, the firm being the principal contractor⁴³. An assignee of the contractor, who has furnished the material and performed the labor called for by the contract, is entitled to a lien for the amount due either as a contractor or as a subcontractor, where nothing was paid to the original contractor and the latter did no part of the work under the contract and has waived all claim thereunder ⁴⁴

§ 91. — Lien for Labor and Material Furnished

Ordinarily a contractor is entitled to a lien for labor and material furnished by him in the performance of his contract

While the contrary has been held under a few statutes,⁴⁵ it is generally held that a contractor is entitled to a lien for labor furnished by him and actually performed by persons working under him,⁴⁶ and even though his workmen have taken out liens the effect is only to diminish the contractor's lien pro tanto ⁴⁷ The contractor has also a lien for necessary materials furnished by him in order to comply with his contract ⁴⁸ A contractor is not entitled to a lien for labor⁴⁹ or materials⁵⁰ furnished by others, and for which he did not pay, and it is doubtful whether a contractor to do certain work is entitled to a lien for a profit on labor and material furnished by other persons under contracts directly with the owner for the doing of work bearing no relation to the work performed by him ⁵¹

§ 92. — Stipulations of Contract as to Lien

A stipulation in the contract between the owner and the contractor that the contractor will not assert a lien is binding

Where the contract between the owner and contractor stipulates that the contractor will assert no lien, the contractor will, of course, be bound by such stipulation,⁵² but the stipulation must be explicit⁵³ Its intent⁵⁴ and interpretation⁵⁵ should be reasonably clear, and, where so provided by statute, it must be made a matter of record ⁵⁶ Stipulations that the contractor shall promptly pay for all materials, so that a lien will not arise,⁵⁷ that he shall give security that no liens will be filed,⁵⁸ that he shall present a certificate that the property is free from liens,⁵⁹ that the building shall be delivered free from liens,⁶⁰ that all bills shall be paid by check of the contractor,⁶¹ that the contractor will satisfy every claim,⁶² or that the contractor will not permit any liens to be set up by subcontractors⁶³ have been held not to defeat the right of the contractor to a lien

It has been held, however, that a stipulation of the contractor to complete the work free from mechanics' liens,⁶⁴ or to transfer the house to the owner clear of all claims or encumbrances,⁶⁵ excludes a lien in his favor, and that the covenant of the contractor to furnish a release from liens is, as to himself, the equivalent of a covenant not to file a lien ⁶⁶

§ 93. — Modification of Contract

Slight alterations or modifications of the contract as to the manner of execution will not abrogate the right of a contractor to a lien.

Slight alterations or modifications of the contract as to the manner of the execution and the like will not abrogate the right of a contractor to a lien ⁶⁷

§ 94. — Rescission of Contract

The contractor cannot have a lien where the owner rescinds the contract before any work is done

Where the owner, before any work is done, rescinds the contract, the contractor cannot proceed and have a lien,⁶⁸ his remedy being an action for damages for breach of contract,⁶⁹ but where a partly performed building contract is canceled by mutual consent, and the value of the work already performed and of the materials furnished ascertained and agreed on, and the owner promises to pay such agreed value, the right to a lien is not waived or lost by the contractor ⁷⁰

§ 95. — Performance of Contract

In the absence of an adequate excuse for nonper-

formance or a waiver thereof by the owner, performance of his contract is necessary in order to entitle the contractor to a lien

In the absence of an adequate excuse for nonperformance,⁷¹ or of waiver by the owner of nonperformance,⁷² performance of his contract is necessary in order to entitle the contractor to a lien ⁷³ The contractor is not entitled to a lien where he has not substantially performed his contract,⁷⁴ or where he has failed to perform a material and considerable part of the work required under the contract,⁷⁵ or where he has willfully or intentionally departed from, or failed to carry out, the terms of the contract,⁷⁶ even though in an unimportant respect ⁷⁷

On the other hand, the contractor is entitled to a lien where he has acted in good faith in endeavoring to perform his contract⁷⁸ and has substantially performed it,⁷⁹ even though there are slight, minor, or trifling defects or omissions ⁸⁰ An intention substantially to perform is negated by a refusal

On proof by building contractor of his allegations that he had complied with his contract to construct building in so far as he was permitted by owner, and that his failure to complete the contract was due to failure of owner to comply with his obligation under the contract to make advances to contractor for purpose of meeting pay rolls, contractor would be entitled to an equitable lien on the improvement made, and for the amount of his recovery on quantum meruit, just as though he had fully performed the contract as contemplated by the statute setting up lien in his favor—Shubert v Speir, 38 SE2d 835, 201 Ga 20

to cure defects or complete the contract when called on to do so⁸¹ Compliance with the contract is sufficiently shown where it appears that claimant offered to do any work which the owner should designate that should be done, and the owner failed to designate any,⁸² or that the owner accepted the building, knowing the defects complained of,⁸³ but the taking of possession of the premises by the owner and the mere use and occupancy thereof do not, without more, constitute an unequivocal acceptance⁸⁴

Performance to satisfaction of architect or owner

Where, by the terms of the contract, it is to be performed to the satisfaction of an architect⁸⁵ or the owner,⁸⁶ such satisfaction must be shown Thus, where a contract provides that the work shall be done to the full and complete satisfaction of the architect, and payment made on presentation of his certificate that the contractor is entitled thereto, a contractor who has not furnished such a certificate or shown any excuse for not furnishing it is not entitled to a lien for the amount of his claim⁸⁷ Neither the owner⁸⁸ nor the architect⁸⁹ will be allowed to defeat the lien by unjust or capricious action in the matter, and failure to produce an architect's certificate is excused where, owing to the discharge of the architect, there is no one who can give a certificate⁹⁰ A provision in the contract for the production of a certificate of the architect may be waived by the owner⁹¹

Time of performance Mere delay in completing a contract which contains no stipulation limiting the time of performance and which still subsists as a binding agreement is not fatal to the maintenance of a lien⁹² in the absence of bad faith in the final part of the performance,⁹³ and, even where the contract limits the time for completion, failure to complete within the stipulated time ordinarily will not prevent a lien,⁹⁴ but it is otherwise when the time of completion is of the essence of the contract.⁹⁵

§ 96. — Abandonment by Contractor

Where a contractor, without sufficient grounds or excuse, abandons the contract or ceases work, he loses the right to a mechanic's lien

Where the contractor abandons the contract or ceases work before completion, he forfeits all right to a lien⁹⁶ where such abandonment or cessation of work is due to his fault⁹⁷ or is without sufficient grounds or excuse⁹⁸ Where, however, the abandonment is attributable to the fault of the owner, and the contractor was free from fault in the matter and justified in abandoning the work, he is entitled to a lien for what was done or furnished⁹⁹

It has generally been held that the owner's refusal to pay an installment due under the contract is a justification of the contractor's refusal to complete his contract,¹ and entitles him to enforce a lien for what has been done,² although in some jurisdictions the rule has been given a limited application.³ Matters held not to constitute an abandonment, discontinuance of the work, or election not to go on with the contract include the filing of a claim of lien by the contractor before the completion of the work⁴ or a stoppage of the work in pursuance of an agreement between the owner and contractor that it be stopped until the owner procures funds.⁵

Completion by owner Where the contract contains a stipulation authorizing the owner to complete the work on the contractor's neglect or refusal so to do, and the owner does so, the contractor may have a lien for the difference between the cost of completion and the balance unpaid on the contract,⁶ provided, of course, the cost of completion does not exceed such balance,⁷ but this rule is inapplicable in the absence of such a stipulation.⁸

2 SUBCONTRACTORS, AND CONTRACTORS' WORKMEN AND MATERIALMEN

§ 97. In General

The right to a mechanic's lien extends to persons who do work and furnish materials under a contract with, or employment by, the contractor.

The right to a mechanic's lien is not confined to persons contracting directly with the owner of the property⁹ or performing labor or furnishing material with the actual knowledge of the owner,¹⁰ but extends to persons who do work and furnish materials under a contract with, or employment by, the contractor.¹¹ It is sufficient if there is a contract between the owner and some one for the improvement of the property,¹² claimant is a laborer, materialman, or subcontractor under contract with, or employment by, the contractor,¹³ and he does work or furnishes material for the contractor in pursuance of the latter's agreement with the owner.¹⁴

In order to be entitled to a lien, however, a claimant must connect himself with the owner in some way, directly or indirectly, by some link of a contractual nature.¹⁵ The owner must be actually liable therefor according to the terms of his contract with his contractor,¹⁶ and, where claimant has not contracted directly with the owner, it is generally deemed necessary that he shall have contracted with,¹⁷ or furnished material to,¹⁸ the contractor. Persons contracting with a person other than the owner are charged with the duty of ascertaining whether the person with whom they contract has such a contractual relation with the owner as to be authorized to bind the latter's property.¹⁹ The statutes do not confer on subcontractors and materialmen, not in privity of contract with the owner, a right of action independent of their lien.²⁰

The death of the contractor, after the completion of the work, does not deprive a subcontractor, laborer, or materialman of the right to acquire a lien for what was done or furnished at the request of the contractor.²¹

§ 98. Subcontractors

A subcontractor entitled to a mechanic's lien is one who directly contracts with the principal contractor to construct or erect some part of a structure and to furnish the material therefor, or one to whom the principal contractor sublets a portion, or even all, of the contract.

As a general rule the mechanics' lien statutes give subcontractors the right to a lien,²² although under some statutes, mostly early ones, such right is, or at one time was, denied to them.²³ It has been stated that the rights of a subcontractor are neither superior nor inferior to those of the contractor, where the subcontractor does or furnishes what the contractor agreed to furnish.²⁴ The lien conferred by statute on a subcontractor cannot be suspended by a declaration of the owner that claimant is not to hold the owner's property for material furnished or labor performed for the original contractor, but that he must look to the original contractor.²⁵ A lien may be filed by a subcontractor even though the contractor has previously filed a lien for the entire contract.²⁶

A subcontractor, within the meaning of the mechanics' lien statutes has been held to be one who directly contracts with the principal contractor.²⁷

to construct or erect some part of the structure²⁸ and to furnish the material therefor,²⁹ or one to whom the principal contractor sublets a portion,³⁰ or even all,³¹ of the contract. Also some courts define a subcontractor as one who has entered into a contract, express or implied, for the performance of an act with the person who has already contracted for its performance,³² but other courts, while recognizing this as a literal definition,³³ hold that, in respect of the mechanics' lien law, the word has a much narrower meaning.³⁴ A laborer working by the day is not a "subcontractor" within the meaning of the lien law.³⁵ However, it has been said that a day laborer who works under an agreement with the contractor is in one view a subcontractor.³⁶ At any rate, where a person is a subcontractor by reason of his having contracted with the contractor to perform a specific part of the work which the contractor has contracted with the owner to do, his status is not changed by the fact that the compensation is to be computed by the day.³⁷

Lienable matters A subcontractor as such is entitled to a lien for labor³⁸ and material³⁹ furnished and paid for by him in the performance of his subcontract. In other words, a subcontractor is entitled to a lien not only for his own labor,⁴⁰ but also for labor furnished by him and actually performed by other persons whom he employs.⁴¹ Under some statutes a subcontractor is not entitled to a lien for materials furnished by him.⁴²

§ 99. Subcontractors of Subcontractors

Under some statutes a subcontractor of a subcontractor is entitled to a mechanic's lien.

Under some statutes,⁴³ but not under others,⁴⁴ a subcontractor of a subcontractor is entitled to a mechanic's lien.

Persons who furnish materials to subcontractors are given a mechanic's lien therefor under some statutes,⁵² but where it does not clearly appear to be the legislative intent that such persons shall have a lien it is not allowed.⁵³

§ 103. Persons Furnishing Materials to Another Materialman

Persons furnishing material to materialmen are usually not entitled to a mechanic's lien.

Persons furnishing material to materialmen are usually not entitled to a mechanic's lien⁵⁴ although under some constitutional provisions a lien is allowed to them.⁵⁵

Under some statutes a person merely furnishing labor to the principal contractor has been held not entitled to a lien for the value thereof.⁵⁶

§ 105. Nature of Lien

- a. In general
- b. Direct lien

a. In General

Two systems seem to have been adopted for the protection of the subcontractor, materialman, or laborer, one conferring a lien by subrogation, the other conferring a direct lien.

The protection of the subcontractor and materialman, with a just regard to the rights of the owner of the property, has been the subject of much solicitude with most of the legislatures.⁵⁷ Two systems seem principally to have been adopted, one conferring a lien by subrogation and known as the New York system, the other conferring a direct lien and known as the Pennsylvania system.⁵⁸ A clear conception of the distinction between these two systems is necessary to an understanding of the cases, for not only have different systems prevailed in different states, but in some instances the legislative history of a single state shows that each of the two systems mentioned has prevailed therein at some period,⁵⁹ and many propositions of law laid down with reference to one system are totally inapplicable where the other system prevails.⁶⁰ The fact that under the New York system the subcontractor cannot recover more than is due from the owner to the contractor while under the Pennsylvania system payment to the original contractor is no defense to a claim of a subcontractor is said to constitute the prominent distinction between the two systems.⁶¹ However, some statutes adopting the Pennsylvania system incorporate certain features of the New York system.⁶²

Under some statutes an absolute, direct, and independent mechanic's lien is conferred on a subcontractor, laborer, or materialman, irrespective of the right of the principal contractor to a lien.

Statutes embodying what is known as the Pennsylvania system⁶³ confer a mechanic's lien on a subcontractor, laborer, or materialman, not by subrogation to the rights of the original contractor,⁶⁴ but rather an absolute,⁶⁵ direct,⁶⁶ and independent⁶⁷ lien, irrespective of the right of the principal contractor to a lien,⁶⁸ the state or condition of the account between the owner and the contractor,⁶⁹ or whether there is anything due the contractor from the owner.⁷⁰ These statutes proceed on the view that by the contract the owner makes the contractor an agent with power to bind the property for such labor and materials as are reasonably necessary to fulfill the contract,⁷¹ or that the owner, on entering into the contract, knows or understands that the contractor must employ others to do work and furnish material⁷² and therefore consents to what is done and furnished by persons so employed,⁷³ or that claimant is entitled to be protected because of his having contributed to the making of the improvement⁷⁴ and the enhancement of the value of the property⁷⁵. The objects of such statutes are to prevent collusion between the contractor and the owner⁷⁶ and to protect those who perform labor in, or furnish material for the erection of, a building from being defrauded⁷⁷.

§ 106. — Lien by Subrogation

Under some statutes the lien of a subcontractor, materialman, or workman is based on a species of subrogation to the rights of the original contractor.

Under statutes embodying what is known as the New York system,⁷⁸ the lien of a subcontractor, materialman, or workman is based on a species of subrogation to the rights of the original contractor,⁷⁹ he is entitled to a lien only when the contractor is entitled to one⁸⁰ and there is something due or to become due to the principal contractor⁸¹.

§ 107. Effect of Filing of Principal Contract by Owner

Under the express provisions of some statutes the effect of a filing of a contract between the owner and the original contractor is to protect the building and the land on which it stands from a lien in favor of any person except the original contractor.

Under the express provisions of some statutes the effect of a filing of the contract between the owner and the original contractor is to protect the building and the land on which it stands from a lien in favor of any person except the original contractor for work done or materials furnished pursuant to the contract, and subcontractors, workmen, or materialmen are not entitled to a lien⁸². Conditional sales contract

The filing of a paper by a seller as a contract of conditional sale and claimant other than the original contractor may obtain a lien for work done or materials furnished prior to the filing of the contract.⁸³ The failure of the recording officer properly to file a contract delivered to him for filing will not make the filing insufficient so as to deprive the owner of the benefit thereof.⁸⁴

§ 108. Effect of Stipulations in Principal Contract

Subcontractors, materialmen, and workmen are chargeable with notice of the terms of the original contract, and, as a general rule their right to a mechanic's lien is controlled by its terms.

Subcontractors, materialmen, and workmen are chargeable with notice of the terms of the original contract,⁸⁵ and, except in some jurisdictions,⁸⁶ as a general rule their right to a mechanic's lien is controlled by the terms of such contract.⁸⁷ Also it has been held that they are entitled to a lien only where the claim is for work done or materials furnished in conformity with the terms of the contract with the owner,⁸⁸ although there is also authority to the contrary.⁸⁹

§ 109. — As to Lien

The courts are not in harmony as to whether a stipulation against liens in the contract between the owner and the contractor will deprive the subcontractor, materialman, or workman of the right to a mechanic's lien.

The courts are not in harmony as to whether a stipulation against liens in the contract between the owner and the contractor will deprive the subcontractor, materialman, or workman of the right to a mechanic's lien which the statute gives him.⁹⁰ There is authority that such a stipulation will not deprive the subcontractor, materialman, or workman of the right to a lien⁹¹ unless he assents or agrees to the stipulation⁹² or at least has actual notice thereof⁹³ before accepting the employment⁹⁴ or furnishing the materials.⁹⁵

In some jurisdictions a covenant or stipulation against liens in a contract between the owner and the contractor is binding on all persons who furnish labor or materials so as to preclude their acquiring any lien,⁹⁶ provided it is so clear and plain that it

Where general contractors and subcontractor had entered into written agreements with owners not to permit or suffer any mechanics' liens to be filed against property but contract between subcontractor and sub-subcontractor did not specifically impose that condition on the sub-subcontractor, it was entitled under its contract to retain all its legal rights until payment or a valid tender of payment—Battista v Horton, Myers & Raymond, 128 F 2d 29, 76 US App DC 1

defeated by other provisions of the contract.²²

§ 110. — As to Payment

A subcontractor or other person not contracting directly with the owner is charged with notice of, and is bound by, the terms of the contract between the owner and the contractor relating to the mode and terms of payment.

A subcontractor or other person not contracting directly with the owner is charged with notice of,²³ and is bound by,²⁴ the terms of the contract between the owner and the contractor relating to the mode and terms of payment; and his contract with the contractor is presumed to have been made with reference to such terms.²⁵ Where the mode of payment provided for in the original contract is inconsistent with the existence of a lien in favor of subcontractors and others, they can have no lien²⁶ unless the owner has by his conduct deprived himself of the right to set up such provisions against the lien claimant.²⁷

Also the owner cannot be required to pay money to the lien claimant before it becomes payable according to the contract between the owner and the contractor,²⁸ but a subcontractor can enforce a lien for materials furnished notwithstanding an architect's certificate was not furnished the owner as required by the terms of the building contract before payments should be made, where it appears that the owner availed himself of a right given him by the terms of the contract in case the contractor abandoned the work to complete the building himself,²⁹ since the provision of the contract requiring the furnishing of an architect's certificate applies only under the condition that the contractor has performed his contract.³⁰ The owner, contractor, and his surety cannot, without the materialman's consent, destroy his lien for materials furnished to the contractor by stipulations in a building contract or in the contractor's bond directing disposition of the unpaid balance resulting from performance of the contract by the contractor, or one standing in his shoes.³¹ Where an owner refuses to pay the contractor, relying on a provision of the contract that permits him to retain enough of the contract price to satisfy liens of subcontractors, he cannot also refuse to pay the subcontractors.³² A provision of the contract, reserving to the owner the right to see that money due the contractor, or as much thereof as may be necessary, should be applied to the payment of material and labor authorizes him to make a subsequent agreement with a materialman to pay for materials.³³

§ 111. Modification or Rescission of Principal Contract

The rights of subcontractors, materialmen, and workmen cannot be affected by any subsequent agreement between the owner and the contractor to which they have not assented and of which they have had no notice

The rights of subcontractors, materialmen, and workmen cannot be affected by any subsequent agreement between the owner and the contractor to which they have not assented³⁴ and of which they have had no notice.³⁵ Neither can the owner, by canceling his contract with the contractor, disappoint those who on the faith of the contract have entered into engagements with the contractor to furnish labor or materials,³⁶ especially where the materials have been furnished to a considerable extent³⁷ or subsequent work is done by subcontractors³⁸ without notice of the cancellation. A lien is not acquired, however, by a delivery of materials

after the contract between the owner and the contractor, pursuant to which the delivery is claimed to have been made, has terminated³⁹ Where the original contract is modified, but the modified contract would have been valid originally and the performance of it the basis for a lien, the fact that the performance was according to the terms of the modified, and not of the original, contract does not defeat the lien of a subcontractor⁴⁰

§ 112. Default in Performance of Principal Contract

As a general rule the failure of the principal contractor to complete his contract does not of itself defeat the right of the subcontractor, workman or materialman to a mechanic's lien.

It is well established as a general rule that the failure of the principal contractor to complete his contract does not of itself defeat the right of the subcontractor, workman, or materialman to a mechanic's lien⁴¹ The rule is especially applicable where the contractor has substantially, although not wholly, performed his contract⁴² or where the owner has waived the default of the contractor⁴³ Also the rule is especially applicable under statutes conferring a direct lien,⁴⁴ and even under statutes conferring a lien by subrogation the rule is applicable where, notwithstanding the abandonment of the contract by the contractor, there is something due him at the time claimants give notice or file their lien claims,⁴⁵ as where installments of the contract price are due and unpaid,⁴⁶ but under such statutes the right of a claimant to a lien, where the contractor abandons the contract,⁴⁷ as in all other cases, depends on there being something due or to become due the contractor, and hence there is no lien where the contractor abandons the contract or fails to complete it under such circumstances that there is nothing due or to become due him when claimant gives notice or files his lien claim,⁴⁸ as

Trust fund

Where, shortly before completion of work under a contract for construction of a garage, the owner of the property placed a mortgage thereon, wherein he stipulated that proceeds of mortgage should constitute a trust fund to be applied to the cost of constructing the garage, the fact that principal contractor failed substantially to perform his contract would not relieve property owner of obligation to apply balance of proceeds of mortgage in payment of liens of subcontractors for material and labor furnished for construction of garage with knowledge and consent of property owner.—Cassino v Yacevich, 27 NYS 2d 95, 261 App Div 685

Per cent retained by owner

Where the contract contains a provision for payment from time to time of a certain proportion of the value of the work done, the remainder to be paid on completion of the contract, and the contractor abandons, the amounts so retained never where by the terms of the contract no part of the price is due until the contract is performed⁴⁹

The failure of the owner to take possession, as authorized by the contract, of plumber's supplies left on the premises at the time the contractor abandoned the work is not ground for a lien⁵⁰ Where a contractor has abandoned his contract for the construction of a building, he has no authority thereafter to purchase material so as to bind the owner⁵¹ However, it has been held that a subcontractor is not bound to know of the violation or non-fulfillment of the principal contract⁵²

Delay in performance The failure of the contractor to complete the construction of the building within the time limited in the contract does not deprive subcontractors or materialmen of their liens where time is not of the essence of the contract,⁵³ or where the owner extended the time for performance⁵⁴ or waived the right to terminate the contract on the ground of delay⁵⁵

Worthless improvement Some authorities hold that a subcontractor or materialman may be entitled to a lien even though, owing to the contractor's default, the improvement is worthless,⁵⁶ but other authorities take a contrary view⁵⁷

Completion by owner. Where the owner completes the work, after abandonment by the contractor, and the cost of completion equals or exceeds the unpaid portion of the contract price, no lien can be enforced⁵⁸ provided it appears that the owner completed the building according to the plan contemplated by the original contract⁵⁹ Conversely, where the cost of completion by the owner is less than the unpaid balance on the contract, there is a right to a lien,⁶⁰ provided, according to some authorities, there is a provision in the contract authorizing the owner, on the contractor's abandonment or default, to complete the work and deduct the cost from the contract price⁶¹ and the owner acts under such provision.⁶² No lien can be acquired for what is done or furnished pursuant to the contract after the contractor has lost his right to continue work through his failure to perform and the owner has entered into possession for the purpose of completing on his own account⁶³ unless the work is done under a new agreement made directly with the owner⁶⁴

Completion by assignee or surety The completion of a contract by a surety or assignee of the contractor, after it has been abandoned by him, has the same effect as a completion by the contractor as far as the right of a subcontractor or materialman to a lien is concerned⁶⁵

by the contractor to work at day's wages to be afterward fixed is a sufficiently definite contract for the foundation of a mechanic's lien.⁶⁷ Where work is done and materials are furnished for a building by persons as partners, and the owner knows that such persons are doing the work, their right to a lien is not affected by the fact that one of them made the agreement with the contractor without disclosing the fact that he was acting for the firm.⁶⁸ Where it appears that the labor and material for which a subcontractor claims a lien went, by actual measurement, into the house on which the lien is claimed, it is immaterial whether the contract between the contractor and claimant, which related to two houses, fixed the price for each at the amount claimed or the price for both at double that amount.⁶⁹ Where general contractors and a subcontractor enter into a written agreement with owners not to permit or suffer any mechanics' liens to be filed, but such a condition is not contained in the contract between the subcontractor and a sub-subcontractor, it has been held that a provision requiring work to be done in accordance with plans and specifications in the principal contract does not impose an obligation on the sub-subcontractor either to furnish a release of lien or to see to it that no liens are filed.⁷⁰

Under the former statutes of some jurisdictions requiring the contract to provide for the completion of the work within a specified period of time after the date of the contract, it was sufficient if the original contract complied with the statute,⁷¹ even though the subcontract might not have fixed any time for completion,⁷² or fixed a time limit for performance beyond that provided in the original contract.⁷³

Cancellation. A subcontractor is not entitled to a lien where the subcontract has been canceled by agreement of the parties.⁷⁴

b. Performance

In order to entitle a subcontractor, or persons claiming under him, to a mechanic's lien it is as a rule necessary that he shall have substantially performed his subcontract.

In order to entitle a subcontractor, or persons claiming under him, to a mechanic's lien it is as a rule necessary that he shall have substantially performed his subcontract.⁷⁵ A trifling failure in the performance of the contract is not sufficient to defeat the lien where it appears that there has been a substantial compliance.⁷⁶ While the rule requiring substantial performance is applicable notwithstanding the contractor's waiver of complete performance,⁷⁷ and the contractor's erroneous construction of the subcontract in one detail does not justify the subcontractor's failure to perform other work concededly within the contract,⁷⁸ a subcontractor does not lose his right to a lien because of his failure to complete the work under the contractor where the cause of his ceasing work was the contractor's insolvency and failure to pay him,⁷⁹ or abandonment of the contract,⁸⁰ or where he was prevented from fully performing his contract by the act of the owner,⁸¹ or where he was stopped in the performance of the work by disputes between the contractor and the owner,⁸² or where the owner waived full performance⁸³ or is estopped to claim that the subcontractor did not fully perform.⁸⁴

The right of a subcontractor to a lien will not be defeated by defects in the work arising from the architecture,⁸⁵ and where the subcontractor offers to correct work differing from the plan, but is prevented by the owner from doing so, he may enforce his lien if the cost of correction is trifling⁸⁶

Architect's certificate Where the contract between the principal contractor and the subcontractor requires an architect's certificate as to the work done by the subcontractor, a compliance therewith is a condition precedent to the assertion of a lien⁸⁷ unless it is waived⁸⁸ or unreasonably refused⁸⁹

Completion by contractor Where a principal contractor on a default of a subcontractor undertook with the consent of the owner and a materialman, who had furnished materials to the subcontractor, to complete the work, the right of the materialman to claim a lien on the money coming due under the contract from the principal contractor to the subcontractor continued as though the subcontractor had completed his contract⁹⁰ However, where subcontractors, unable to complete their contract, authorize the contractor to complete it on their account, which he does, the cost is to be deducted from the contract price before anything becomes due to the subcontractors to which a lien may attach⁹¹

§ 114. Lien on Money Due Contractor

Under some statutes subcontractors, materialmen, laborers, and others who have done work for, or furnished materials to, the contractor are given a lien on the balance due or to become due to the contractor from the owner.

Although not entitled to such a lien in the absence of statute,⁹² under some statutes subcontractors, materialmen, laborers, and others who have done work for, or furnished materials to the contractor are given a lien on the balance due or to become due to the contractor from the owner⁹³ Under such statutes a subcontractor, workman, or materialman has the right to serve on the owner a notice or statement of the amount due him by the contractor,⁹⁴ commonly called a "stop notice,"⁹⁵ and it then becomes the duty of the owner to hold back out of any money due or to become due the contractor a sufficient amount to meet the claim,⁹⁶ and to the extent of the amount due or to become

Stop notice operates on sums due or to become due from owner to the

due the contractor,⁹⁷ but not further,⁹⁸ the owner then becomes directly liable to claimant, who, to the extent of his demand, takes the place of the contractor.⁹⁹

While this right is usually conferred by the same statutes which provide for mechanics' liens and is termed a "lien," the remedy provided is really more in the nature of an equitable garnishment,¹ or, as frequently stated, the notice to the owner has the effect of working an assignment pro tanto of that which is due or to become due from the owner to the contractor from the time of the service of such notice.² The remedy is distinct³ and disconnected⁴ from, and additional to,⁵ the remedy by lien on the land and building, and should be regarded with favor by the courts.⁶ Except in at least one jurisdiction,⁷ it does not depend on the right to acquire and enforce a mechanic's lien on the property,⁸ but may, and frequently does, exist where the property itself is not subject to a lien,⁹ as where the right to a lien on the premises has been waived,¹⁰ or, except in at least one jurisdiction,¹¹ where the building or structure is public property.¹²

The right is not dependent on the completion of the principal contract by the contractor.¹³ A recovery of judgment against the contractor does not destroy the rights acquired by the notice,¹⁴ nor is the dismissal of a suit brought by the contractor against the owner on the ground that there is nothing due him a determination against claims of subcontractors on the fund still in the owner's hands.¹⁵ Under the terms of a statute a claimant who, on the written demand of the owner, refuses to give a stop notice is deprived of the right to claim a mechanic's lien on the property.¹⁶

Liens on public funds appropriated and due contractors are considered in Counties § 201, Drains § 43; Highways § 209, the CJS title Municipal Corporations § 1216, also 44 CJ p 416 note 4-p 422 note 7, the CJS title Schools and School Districts § 317, also 56 CJ p 526 note 54-p 528 note 91; the CJS title States § 127, also 59 CJ p 191 note 82-p 192 note 11; and the CJS title United States § 102.

Compliance with statutory requirements, with regard to demand and notice, is necessary to obtain a lien on money due the contractor from the owner.

It is only by compliance with the statute that the lien on money due the contractor from the owner may be obtained²⁵ Where the statute requires a notice, a notice conforming to the statutory requirements²⁶ must be given²⁷ within the required time²⁸ by the proper person²⁹ and served on the proper person³⁰ Under some statutes claimant must have demanded payment from the contractor of such an amount as he was entitled to receive at once and been refused,³¹ and the notice must recite such demand and refusal³² Also under some statutes the owner must be satisfied of the correctness of the demand³³ While the owner cannot properly express dissatisfaction without just cause therefor,³⁴ nevertheless, where he is properly satisfied that the demand is correct only in part, he is not authorized by the statute to retain out of the moneys due the contractor a sum sufficient to pay such part.³⁵ Until he has given, served, or filed the prescribed notice, accordingly as the particular statute may provide, the subcontractor, workman, or materialman has no preferential right to payment out of the sum due the contractor from the owner.³⁶

§ 117. — Satisfaction and Disposition of Balance

The owner is required by statute to pay the claimant when a stop notice has been served and sufficient money becomes due from owner to the contractor. The contractor's right to the balance over the amount of the claims for which notices have been filed remains unimpaired.

On being satisfied of the correctness of the demand, the owner is required by statute to pay claimant when a stop notice has been served and sufficient money becomes due from the owner to the contractor.³⁷ Since the subcontractor acquires no general lien on the whole fund in the owner's hands,³⁸ but what amounts to a specific appropriation of a part sufficient to pay his account,³⁹ the

contractor's right to the balance over the amount of the claims for which notices have been filed remains unimpaired.⁴⁰ Where the lien can be satisfied out of the amount due the principal contractor when notice is served or filed, it will not attach to an amount subsequently becoming due.⁴¹ On the other hand, where nothing is then due, or the amount due is insufficient to satisfy the lien, it attaches to any amount subsequently becoming due under the contract.⁴² However, in such case, the owner must withhold a sufficient amount to meet the claims out of the moneys first becoming due thereafter,⁴³ and, if an installment becoming due next after the service of such notices satisfies them and leaves a residue, that residue is at the disposal of the contractor⁴⁴ and liable to the attack of his outside creditors,⁴⁵ but, if there is a deficiency unsatisfied, notices will operate on the next installment which comes due under the contract in the progress of the work, and so on until the final installment has been disposed of in the same manner,⁴⁶ the effect of the stop notice not being limited to the money due at the time of the giving of the notice, or falling due next after the use in the building of the materials on account of which the notice is given.⁴⁷

In determining what constitutes substantial compliance with statutory requirements for materialman's lien, purpose of requirement and effect of misperformance will be con-

times expressly so provided by statute⁵⁹ Every materialman's lien must be perfected as an entity,⁶⁰ and, where there are two or more liens, each must be perfected by a separate compliance with statutory requirements⁶¹

§ 120. Notice to Owner

The purpose of statutory provisions requiring notice to the owner of intention to claim a lien is to furnish him information for his protection.

A statutory notice to the owner of an intention to claim a lien is for the benefit⁶² and protection⁶³ of the owner, it is intended to furnish him information⁶⁴ and enable him to take steps to guard himself against loss⁶⁵ Where such notice is given and there is compliance with other requirements of the statute, the lien is acquired⁶⁶ Ordinarily, it is not required that the notice be filed or recorded⁶⁷

Notice to the owner as part of the procedure of perfecting a lien is to be distinguished from the notice, commonly called a "stop notice," given to the owner by subcontractors, laborers, or materialmen for the purpose of acquiring a lien on the amount due or to become due the contractor, as discussed supra § 114, and from the lien claim or statement, sometimes termed a "notice of lien," which is required of every claimant regardless of whether he is a contractor, subcontractor, laborer, or materialman, as discussed infra § 131 Also it is to be distinguished from the notice of filing required by some statutes, as discussed infra § 146.

§ 121. — Necessity

Generally, the statutes require notice of intent to claim a lien to be given the owner only in cases where the lien claimant does not deal directly with the owner or his authorized agent.

As a general rule, one not dealing directly with the owner and who wishes to acquire a lien is required by statute to notify the owner that he has furnished labor or materials for which he has not been paid and that he intends to claim a lien,⁶⁸ and the contract was made or the materials were furnished,⁹⁵ and in this respect the persons who may be regarded as owners entitled to notice may depend on the terms of the statute.⁹⁶ Where the notice is given to the person who appears by the public records to be the owner, the lien is not defeated because it subsequently appears that some other person is the real owner.⁹⁷ However, notice need not be given to the legal or record owner of property holding it for another who is the equitable owner in fee and contracts for construction of a building,⁹⁸ as in the case of a pretended and fraudulent owner holding record title for the protection of the real owner with whom the contract was made.⁹⁹ Notice need not be given to the original contractor¹ or to a mortgagee,² and service of notice on an owner has been held sufficient without service on a lessee who contracted for the improvements.³

Two or more owners Where there are two or more owners, notice should be served on all,⁴ the interest of any joint owner not served will not be bound by the lien.⁵ Some courts hold that a notice to only one of two or more owners binds his interest,⁶ but other courts hold the contrary where the work is being done under the authority of all the tenants in common.⁷ Service of a notice to a partnership on one partner is sufficient.⁸

Change of ownership. Where there has been a change of ownership, the person who is the owner at the time the lien attaches is the proper person to be served,⁹ and notice need not be given to prior¹⁰ or subsequent¹¹ owners.

b. Representative of Owner

Generally, notice of intent to claim a lien made to the duly authorized agent of the owner is sufficient.

Under a few statutes, notice to an agent of the owner of intention to file a lien, required by statute, is not sufficient,¹² but under many of the statutes it is sufficient that the notice be served on the authorized agent of the owner,¹³ at least where the owner cannot be served in the county.¹⁴ Under

Same meaning under different provisions

Under statutes providing that a subcontractor may perfect a mechanic's lien by filing a memorandum of lien and by giving written notice to "owner" of property or his agent and that one who furnishes materials to a subcontractor may perfect a lien by filing a memorandum and giving written notice to "owner" of property or his agent and to general contractor, quoted word has same meaning as when used in statute concerning procedure to be followed by a general contractor in perfecting a mechanic's lien—Wallace v Drumback, 12 S E 2d 801, 177 Va 36

Under statute providing that word "owner," within statute providing that notice of intention to claim lien must be given owner, should include all the legal or equitable interest of person under contract of purchase, purchasers of house under contract were "owners" within contemplation of statute and were entitled to notice of intention to claim lien by company furnishing material for house, the statute was not intended to distinguish between contract to purchase land, and contract to purchase land and to construct a building thereon—Wyoming Park Lumber & Fuel Co v Vander Ark, 289 N W 228, 291 Mich 496

the latter statutes the person served must be such an agent as the statute contemplates,¹⁵ and in some cases, it has been held insufficient to serve the owner's architect,¹⁶ clerk,¹⁷ or attorney,¹⁸ although, where an attorney at law is the duly authorized agent of the owner for such purpose, service of the notice on the attorney has been held sufficient.¹⁹ Under a statute authorizing service on the party in possession of the structure or improvement where the owner cannot be served in the county, the party in possession need not be the agent of the owner.²⁰ A statutory requirement that notice of a claim for lien shall be served on the owner of a building or his agent is not complied with by service on a member of a building committee of an unincorporated society,²¹ but service of notice as to an unincorporated body has been held sufficient where made on trustees holding the record title to the realty,²² or where made on a trustee or other representative in actual charge of the construction work.²³

Corporate owner Where the owner is a corporation, service on one of its officers is sufficient.³⁷ Where a corporation has only a few stockholders, and notice of intent to claim a lien on certain corporate property is addressed to the persons doing business as the named company and served on all of the stockholders, it has been held to be sufficient, even though no notice addressed to the named corporation is served on it as a distinct entity.³⁸

§ 125. — Time for Giving

- a. In general
- b Particular statutory provisions

a. In General

Notice of intent to claim a mechanic's lien should be timely

In order to preserve and perfect a mechanic's lien, notice of intent to claim it must be timely,³⁹ and served within such period as may be prescribed by statute.⁴⁰ However, a notice, even though given within the time required by statute, has been held to be too late when given after the contractor has been adjudicated a bankrupt.⁴¹ Where the statute designates no specific time within which notice may be given, but provides for a lien for work or materials from the time of service of notice for the amount unpaid on the contract between owner and original contractor, a laborer or materialman not in privity with the owner may give notice at any time within his discretion, as long as it is served before expiration of the time limited by statute, that is, before all moneys have been paid on the original contract.⁴² A notice given before the taking effect of the statute authorizing it is ineffective.⁴³

b. Particular Statutory Provisions

- (1) At or before time of furnishing labor or materials
- (2) Within prescribed period after furnishing labor or materials

(1) At or before Time of Furnishing Labor or Materials

Under some statutory provisions notice should be given at or before the time of furnishing labor or materials

Under some of the statutes the required notice of intent to file a lien must be given at or before the time of furnishing the labor or materials,⁴⁴ and a lien can be acquired only for materials furnished or labor performed after such notice is given.⁴⁵ Where the notice is given after the commencement and during the furnishing of material, the view taken by some authorities is that no lien can be acquired for what is subsequently furnished,⁴⁶ but other authorities take the opposite view.⁴⁷ In a few jurisdictions, a failure to give notice, as required by statute, at the time each item of material is furnished is not fatal where the interested parties are not injured or prejudiced,⁴⁸ as where notice is given

before the owner has paid out all the contract price⁴⁹

Under some statutes notice must be given before the owner settles with the contractor⁵⁰ Under statutes requiring notice prior to the completion of the contract, an abandonment of the contract when partially completed is deemed not to be a completion of the contract⁵¹ Under some statutes, notice of the claim must be given to the owner a certain period of time before filing the lien,⁵² but, in the absence of such an express requirement, a failure to give the notice before the filing of the lien is not fatal⁵³

(2) Within Prescribed Period after Furnishing Labor or Materials

Under statutes varying in their terms, it may be necessary and proper to serve notice of intent to claim a lien within a prescribed period after furnishing work or materials, and, where labor or material is furnished at different times, the statutory limitation for notice will begin to run from the date of the last item if the contract is single, or from the respective dates of each item if furnished under separate contracts

The statutes of a number of jurisdictions variously require, or at times have required, the giving of notice within a certain time after the furnishing of the work or materials,⁵⁴ the commencement of furnishing of the labor or materials,⁵⁵ the completion of the furnishing of labor or materials,⁵⁶ the completion of the work,⁵⁷ the completion of the principal contract,⁵⁸ or permanent abandonment of construction,⁵⁹ the completion of the subcontract,⁶⁰ or the time when payment should have been made.⁶¹ Where the statute requires the giving of notice within a certain time after furnishing material, and the lien claimant furnishes material over an extended period, he has a lien on all material furnished within the statutory time of notice but none for material furnished prior thereto⁶²

The statutes are ordinarily construed as fixing a time beyond which notice may not be given,⁶³ but not to prohibit the giving of notice before the completion or other act mentioned,⁶⁴ provided the notice is given after the subcontract is made⁶⁵ There is authority, however, to the effect that a notice given before completion of the work is not one given within a specified period after completion so as to satisfy the statute⁶⁶

Alternative provisions. Where the statute provides for the giving of notice within a specified time after the happening of one of two or more events, the notice may⁶⁷ and should⁶⁸ be given within the specified time after the event which first occurs, and, of course, it is not in time where, re-

ardless of which event is taken as the beginning of the prescribed period, the notice is not given within the period.⁶⁹

Work or material furnished at different times. Where work or material is furnished at different times under a single contract, it is generally held that the statutory period for giving notice starts to run from the date on which the last work or material was furnished, both under statutes requiring notice to be given within a specified period after the last item is furnished⁷⁰ and under statutes requiring notice to be given within a specified period after the furnishing of the labor or material.⁷¹ The statute runs from the date of the last item, even though the doing of the last item of work is somewhat delayed,⁷² provided the delay is not for the purpose of extending the period for giving notice.⁷³ It is, however, essential that the work or materials at different times be furnished under one continuous contract, express or implied, in order that the date of the last item be taken as that from which limitation for giving notice of intention to claim a lien shall run,⁷⁴ and, where there are separate jobs or contracts, the notice for each must be given within the required time, and separate items cannot be tacked together so that a notice within the required time after the completion of the last will give a lien as to all.⁷⁵

Under a statute requiring notice in writing to be given within sixty days after the materials are placed on the land, it has been held the materialman is entitled to a lien only for materials placed on the land within sixty days prior to the giving of notice to the landowner,⁷⁶ although all the materials were furnished to the contractor under an entire contract.⁷⁷ Under a statute requiring notice to be given within a certain period of time after the commencement of the work, a notice given within the required time after the commencement of a second and new employment is sufficient in respect of work done under that employment.⁷⁸

In order that the time may be extended by a delivery of materials, there must be such a delivery as comes within the terms of the particular statute.⁷ Where the right to a lien has been lost by failure to comply with a statutory requirement that notice of the claim shall be served on the owner within a specified time after the materials have been furnished, it cannot be revived by a subsequent collusive delivery of materials which are not used.⁸⁰ Neither can a delivery of materials after the contract between the owner and the contractor has come to an end by the owner's acceptance of the building as completed avail to extend the time for notice to secure a lien for what was delivered while such contract was in force.⁸¹ However, where, after possession of a building is given, defects and omissions are discovered which the supervising architect requires to be supplied and which are supplied by the subcontractors, the subcontracts are not completed until such additional work is done,⁸² and notices of liens by such subcontractors may be given with respect to this point of time.⁸³ Some statutes expressly provide that in the case of extra or additional work or material, notice shall be given within a specified time after the completion of the extra or additional material.⁸⁴

to be included,⁸⁶ otherwise it is fatally defective⁸⁷ Where no particular form of notice is prescribed, it must be made in some way which puts the owner on his guard as to claimant's intention to assert a lien,⁸⁸ or warns him that the initiatory step to the acquisition of a lien is being taken, and gives him the necessary information with respect to the claim for which it is proposed to hold a lien⁸⁹ It is, however, sufficient if the notice gives the information required by the statute, although it does not use the exact words of the statute⁹⁰ The same exactness is not insisted on in the notice as in the lien itself⁹¹ The statute need not be referred to by name or section⁹² Neither is it necessary to state the facts necessary to make the lien valid⁹³ Merely informing the owner that the materialman is furnishing materials and looks to the owner for payment has been held sufficient in some,⁹⁴ but not other,⁹⁵ cases However, it is not sufficient for the materialman to inform the owner in a casual conversation that he is furnishing material⁹⁶

The lien is not defeated by superfluous statements⁹⁷ or unimportant errors⁹⁸ in the notice In determining the question whether the notice is sufficient, the exhibits and affidavits attached thereto are to be considered,⁹⁹ but, where a claimant serves more than one notice claiming a lien for the same account, the several notices cannot be considered together for the purpose of determining the sufficiency of notice to hold a lien,¹ but each must stand on its own merits,² and no lien will exist unless one of the notices is in itself sufficient to give it³ The fact that the notice is not dated does not affect its sufficiency⁴

Waiver of defects Defects in the notice have been held subject to waiver.⁵ A defect in a notice is not waived, however, by the act of the owner in pleading to a scire facias on the lien.⁶

Oral or written notice Where the statutes require that the notice shall be in writing, compliance in this respect is essential,⁷ unless waived by the owner,⁸ but in the absence of such a requirement oral notice may be sufficient.⁹

b. Statements of Particular Matters

- (1) Intent to claim lien
- (2) Amount and particulars of claim
- (3) Identity and description of parties and property

(1) Intent to Claim Lien

The notice should in some unequivocal manner disclose the claimant's intent to assert a lien.

The notice must indicate in some way the intention of claimant to assert a lien on the property of the owner,¹⁰ or to claim the benefit of the statute conferring the lien,¹¹ the presentation to the owner of an account¹² or order¹³ is not sufficient, as it does not show anything more than an intention to hold the owner personally liable.¹⁴ However, a notice may be sufficient in this respect, although it does not employ the word "intention,"¹⁵ or expressly claim a lien on the property,¹⁶ any phraseology which clearly and distinctly apprises the owner of the intention of claimant to claim a lien will satisfy the requirements of the statute.¹⁷

(2) Amount and Particulars of Claim

A notice of intent to claim a lien should set forth the amount and particulars of the claim in substantial compliance with statutory provisions.

The notice of intent to assert a lien must give information as to the nature and extent of the claim,¹⁸ it must be sufficiently definite fairly to apprise the owner of the service rendered and the charge made therefor.¹⁹ Among the requirements variously imposed by particular statutes are that the notice shall state or show the amount for which a lien will be claimed,²⁰ the amount due,²¹ or to become due,²² that the contractor is indebted to claimant in the sum stated in the notice,²³ that claimant was employed by the contractor,²⁴ that the work was done for or the materials furnished to a contractor with the owner,²⁵ that claimant furnished the materials,²⁶ and the date when the last work was done or the last material was furnished.²⁷ A failure to attach a copy of the plans and specifications to the notice is not necessarily fatal where it appears that the plans and specifications are in the possession of the owner.²⁸

Under some statutes, the notice must contain an itemized account,²⁹ and it must be specified what labor was performed or what materials were furnished,³⁰ but under other statutes, the notice need not specify the items of work or material,³¹ or the prices for each item³² Under some,³³ but not other,³⁴ statutes it must be stated that the materials were used in constructing the building, but the lack of a distinct and affirmative statement in this respect is not fatal³⁵ where the statement made may, by construction, be deemed to fulfill the statutory requirement³⁶ It has been held under some statutes that a subcontractor must state in his notice the nature of the subcontract,³⁷ although it has been held unnecessary to attach a copy of the contract to the notice³⁸

Under particular statutes it has been held unnecessary to state in the notice when payment became³⁹ or will become⁴⁰ due, the conditions of the sale of the material to the principal contractor,⁴¹ that the material was delivered,⁴² when it was to be delivered,⁴³ or that there was any fixed time when it was to be delivered,⁴⁴ or the particular character of the materials,⁴⁵ or to give a specific description of the materials furnished and used⁴⁶ Also, under some statutes, a written cautionary notice that materials will be furnished need not state the amount claimed for the materials⁴⁷

(3) Identity and Description of Parties and Property

The notice of intent to claim a lien should name and describe the parties and premises involved in substantial compliance with statutory requirements.

In compliance with particular statutory provisions, the notice of intent to claim a lien must so name or describe the parties as to indicate who is claiming the lien,⁴⁸ as well as the person or organization against whom it is claimed,⁴⁹ and the name of the contractor or person from whom the debt is owing,⁵⁰ or the name of the one for whom the labor is to be performed or to whom the materials are to be furnished⁵¹ While a notice which shows that the amount claimed is due a person other than claimant is insufficient,⁵² and a notice addressed simply to the agent of the owner has been held insufficient,⁵³ nevertheless the courts are liberal in sustaining a notice which, despite errors or discrepancies therein as to the name of the owner⁵⁴ or contractor or person from whom the debt is owing,⁵⁵ is sufficient to put the owner on guard and does not mislead or prejudice him. Some statutes, although requiring that notice be given the owner, as discussed supra § 124, do not require that it be directed or addressed to him⁵⁶.

Description of property Under some statutes a description of the property to be affected by the lien is an essential part of the required notice to the owner⁵⁷. Other statutes, however, have been held not to require that the notice given to the owner should describe the premises⁵⁸. At any rate, a notice will not be held insufficient in this respect where it contains enough to identify the building⁵⁹ or premises⁶⁰.

§ 127. — Signature and Verification

The notice of intent to claim a lien should be signed by the claimant or his representative and verified where required by statute.

The notice of intent to claim a lien should be signed by claimant⁶¹ or his agent⁶² or attorney⁶³. The fact that it is in the handwriting of claimant will not cure the want of a signature⁶⁴. Where claimant is a copartnership, a notice signed in the firm name is sufficient⁶⁵. A notice by a firm signed in the presence and by the authority of the firm, although not individually by one of the members, is sufficiently signed⁶⁶. Where claimant is a corporation, the notice may be signed by an agent⁶⁷ or attorney⁶⁸ without attaching the seal of the corporation⁶⁹.

Under some statutes the notice must be attested,⁷⁰ or verified by affidavit,⁷¹ and the latter statutes are construed to mean that the notice itself must contain a jurat showing that the paper is sworn to⁷².

§ 128. — Service

Compliance must be had with statutory requirements in serving notice of intent to claim a mechanic's lien.

There should be a due compliance with statutory requirements in serving notice of intent to claim a mechanic's lien⁷³. It has been held that the notice may be efficiently served in any form or by any method which in effect gives the written notice prescribed by the statute,⁷⁴ and that the mode or manner of service is immaterial where it is shown that the owner actually received the notice within the time limited,⁷⁵ but, under statutes requiring verification, as discussed supra § 127, service has been held insufficient where the server removed the affidavit⁷⁶

Subsequent error

Where service on owners at time of contracts was valid, it is imma-

Under some statutes, personal service is not required,⁷⁷ and substituted⁷⁸ or constructive⁷⁹ service, such as by mail⁸⁰ or by leaving the notice or a copy thereof at the owner's usual place of abode⁸¹ with a member of his family,⁸² is sufficient. However, other statutes require personal service,⁸³ unless it is shown that such service could not be obtained by the exercise of reasonable diligence,⁸⁴ and under such statutes service by mail⁸⁵ or by leaving the original notice or a copy thereof at the residence of the owner, with a member of his family,⁸⁶ has been held insufficient. Under some statutes, where the owner or his agent is not to be found in the county, the notice may be served by filing in the clerk's office.⁸⁷ Service of a copy of the notice ordinarily is sufficient.⁸⁸

By posting on premises Under some statutes service may be made by posting the notice on the most public part of the structure or other improvement where the owner cannot be served in the county, and no other person authorized to accept service can be found.⁸⁹ Posting the notice on the building is not sufficient without proof that because of absence or other causes personal service could not be made.⁹⁰

Place It has been held that service may be made on the owner anywhere,⁹¹ and under some statutes a like rule is applicable in respect of service on an agent,⁹² but under other statutes, service on an agent or architect outside of the county where the building is situated is not sufficient.⁹³

Who may make The notice may be served by anyone who would be a competent witness to make affidavit to the service⁹⁴ or by any officer authorized to serve writs or other process of a court,⁹⁵ the service need not be made by an officer⁹⁶ or by

rial that form of service of notice of mechanic's lien on owners under subsequent conveyances was invalid—R D Kurtz, Inc. v Field, 14 SW 2d 9, 223 Mo App 270

§ 129. — Defects and Amendment

Minor defects in the notice of intent to claim a lien will not invalidate the lien, and it has been held that in a proper case the notice may be amended.

Where there is a substantial compliance with statutory requirements, minor or technical defects in the notice will not invalidate the lien,⁹⁸ and it has been held that only the property owner may complain of defects in respect of service of the notice of intent to claim a lien.⁹⁹ Some courts hold that the notice may be amended at the trial in a proper case.¹ Other courts hold that the notice cannot be amended after the expiration of the time within which the statute requires it to be given,² and that statutory provisions authorizing amendment of lien claims, as discussed infra § 170, furnish no authority for amendment of a notice of intention to claim a lien.³ Verification may not be supplied by amendment,⁴ but the mere failure of a notary to affix his seal to the jurat may be cured by amendment.⁵

§ 130. Furnishing Statement or Account to Owner

Under some statutory provisions a contractor seeking to acquire a lien must furnish to the owner a statement showing names and claims of subcontractors, laborers and materialmen, and a similar statement may be required of a subcontractor.

Under a few statutes, a contractor, in order to acquire a lien, must give to the owner a sworn statement showing the names of all subcontractors, laborers, and materialmen and the amounts due to each.⁶ The requirement has been held to apply, although the owner and contractor were the only parties involved,⁷ and despite the contractor's showing that the work and materials were paid for, or that labor was performed by permanent employees and materials furnished from general stock.⁸

Waiver

Under a statute providing that a failure to furnish such names may be pleaded in bar of such contractor's recovery against the owners unless it can be shown that all of such claims have been paid, failure, if any, of principal contractor to furnish complete list was immaterial, where building was inspected and approved by architect after completion—Hogue v D N Morrison Const Co of Virginia, 156 So 377, 115 Fla 293, 95 A.L.R. 357

7. Mich.—Netting Co v Touscany, 225 N.W. 556, 247 Mich 279

8. Mich.—Netting Co v. Touscany, supra,

Under a few statutes, subcontractors claiming liens are required to furnish statements similar to those required of contractors⁹. However, unless requested by the owner,¹⁰ a subcontractor need not furnish his statement directly to the owner¹¹ but may furnish it to the contractor¹² whose duty it is to furnish it to the owner¹³. The fact that the statement of a subcontractor is not served on the owner until after the lien claim is filed is not fatal, provided it is served before the expiration of the time for filing the claim, as discussed infra § 139 a.

Some statutes expressly provide that merchants and dealers in materials only shall not be required to furnish statements,¹⁴ and, under the construction placed on other statutes, it is unnecessary for materialmen, laborers, etc., in order to preserve their liens and privileges on the property of the owner, to file sworn statements with the owner¹⁵.

Account Under some statutes, subcontractors, materialmen, and laborers are required to serve attested accounts on the owner¹⁶. Also, the rendering of periodic accounts to the owner is required by some statutes¹⁷.

perfects, preserves, or perpetuates it²⁸ A fortiori, no lien results from the filing of a claim against property not subject to a mechanic's lien,²⁹ such as a homestead,³⁰ but the rule is otherwise if the homestead is subject to a mechanic's lien³¹

The filing of the claim does not constitute the lien,³² but has been held to be³³ and not to be³⁴ the foundation of the lien. It also has been both affirmed³⁵ and denied³⁶ that the claim or notice, as filed or recorded, is the foundation of an action to enforce the lien. At any rate the claim, notice, or affidavit is not a pleading,³⁷ process,³⁸ judgment,³⁹ or conveyance⁴⁰ The filing of the notice of a lien for materials furnished does not of itself result in a conversion of personal property into real property where such materials have not been annexed to the realty,⁴¹ nor does such filing result in a transfer of the title to the materials⁴²

reinscribed in the records within a specified time after its original recordation, and failure so to do prescribes the lien,⁴³ even as against the owner.⁴⁴

(2) As Determined by Status of Claimant

Under some statutes subcontractors are not required to file a claim or notice.

Under some statutes subcontractors are not required to file a claim or notice,⁴⁵ but under other statutes subcontractors or materialmen must file and have recorded their claims⁴⁶ notwithstanding the contract between the owner and principal contractor is not filed or recorded⁴⁷

(3) As against Particular Persons

Under some statutes filing a recording is essential only to preserve the lien as against third persons.

Under some statutes the filing of the prescribed statement is essential even though enforcement of the lien is sought solely against the owner and no rights of other persons are involved,⁴⁸ but under

In south Dakota

(1) Failure properly to file terminates the lien absolutely—Botsford Lumber Co v Schriver, 206 N W 423, 49 SD 68

(2) Under an earlier statute fail-

other statutes the filing is necessary only to preserve the lien against third persons, such as purchasers or encumbrancers in good faith without notice.⁴⁹ In at least one jurisdiction filing is necessary as against the owner where claimant has not contracted directly with the owner,⁵⁰ but is not necessary where claimant has contracted directly with the owner and hence has a lien by virtue of the constitutional provision conferring it.⁵¹ However, filing is necessary as against subsequent purchasers without notice, actual or constructive.⁵²

(4) Alternative Requirements, Excuses

Under some statutes the institution of a suit to enforce the lien within the time required for filing of the claim makes filing of the claim unnecessary.

Except in at least one jurisdiction⁵³ the filing of a claim or statement is not necessary where suit is brought to enforce the lien within the time allowed for such filing,⁵⁴ some statutes expressly providing, in the alternative, for the filing of the claim or the bringing of suit within a specified time.⁵⁵ Filing of separate liens by laborers or materialmen unwilling to extend credit to the contractor may be but one of several alternatives open to them.⁵⁶

Where the person entitled to the lien is prevented by the act of the owner from complying with the law, such act will excuse the nonperformance of the duty imposed by the statute.⁵⁷ On the other hand, actual notice on the part of the owner will not excuse a failure to comply with the statute,⁵⁸ nor can the owner's expression of willingness that the lien should be valid have the effect of continuing its existence as against other lienholders when lost by failing to file an account as required by statute.⁵⁹ The appointment of a receiver for the property on which the improvement is being erected will not excuse the failure to file and record the statement required by statute,⁶⁰ and, in the case of a mechanic's lien proper, the filing of a claim or notice is not dispensed with where the owner is in failing circumstances,⁶¹ a statute providing that, where the owner is in failing circumstances, certain claims shall be preferred debts, whether or not notice of lien is filed, being construed to be limited to claims for wages of persons employed in or about any shop, etc.,⁶² and not to extend to the claims of contractors, subcontractors, mechanics, laborers, or other persons performing labor or furnishing material for the erection, alteration, or repair of any

Filing promissory note given for amount due. Under some statutes, where a lien claimant has received a promissory note for the amount due him, the note or a copy thereof, with a statement as to the origin of the indebtedness, may be filed instead of the usual lien claim or statement⁶⁴ Such a statute has been held to be permissive rather than compulsory,⁶⁵ and even where a note has been taken the filing of an itemized statement in the usual form will sustain the lien,⁶⁶ claimant need not file both the usual itemized statement and a copy of the note⁶⁷

b. Object of Requirement

Generally the purpose of requiring a statement of claim to be filed is to give notice of the existence of the lien

The purpose of requiring a statement of claim to be filed is to give notice of the existence of the lien⁶⁸ In some cases it has been said that the filing and recording are intended not only to give notice of the lien, but also to give anyone interested all the information necessary to enable him to determine the validity and extent of the lien,⁶⁹ together with its relative rank and merits⁷⁰ A further object of the requirement is to enable plaintiff in foreclosure proceedings to join other lien claimants as parties to the action so as to simplify and expedite the proceedings⁷¹

§ 132. Filing Contract

Some statutes require the contract with the owner for the construction or improvement of a building or structure to be recorded if the lien is to be preserved

Under some statutes provision is made for the recordation of contracts entered into with an owner for the construction or improvement of any building or structure for the purpose of creating and preserving the liens and privileges of the contractor, workmen, and materialmen against the building or other structure.⁷² Under other statutes, however, a failure to file the contract does not defeat the lien of the contractor as against the owner⁷³ or any other person charged with notice,⁷⁴ such statutes being construed, as far as one who contracts directly with the owner is concerned, as being intended only to protect the contractor as against subsequent purchasers, mortgagees, and lienholders in good faith without notice, by furnishing constructive notice to them⁷⁵

§ 133. Filing One or More Claims or Statements by Same Claimant

As a general rule but one valid lien can be filed by the same claimant against the same property for work done under an entire contract

Mechanics' lien statutes do not contemplate that a contractor or subcontractor may from time to time, as the work progresses, file successive liens for work and materials performed and furnished under an entire contract, and thus acquire distinct liens for the different portions of his account, he is entitled to acquire only one lien⁷⁶ Only one valid lien can be filed against the same property for the same account,⁷⁷ and, except in some jurisdictions,⁷⁸ where a claimant who has filed a good and valid lien claim fails to bring suit thereon within the time limited therefor, he cannot cure his neglect by filing

a second lien within the time allowed for filing.⁷⁹ However, where the lien claim filed is defective and not sufficient under the law, the lien claimant is entitled to fix his lien by filing a second claim within the time limited by statute,⁸⁰ and it has been held, where there is uncertainty as to who is the owner of the land on which the building or improvement was erected⁸¹ or as to the person for whom the material was furnished,⁸² that claimant may file two or more liens to cover the exigencies of the case although there may, of course, be but one recovery of the amount due.⁸³

The lien statement may cover and include more than one claim or demand⁸⁴ accruing in favor of the same person and against the same person and property,⁸⁵ provided the statutory requirements are complied with as to each.⁸⁶ The rule is applicable where work is done or materials are furnished under several different contracts between the same parties and relating to the same property,⁸⁷ where the performance of the labor or the supplying of materials is substantially continuous,⁸⁸ or where all the items involved are part of a reasonably continuous transaction,⁸⁹ but not where labor or materials are furnished under contracts between different parties.⁹⁰ A subcontractor may file a single lien for all material furnished under a single and entire contract between him and the contractor, even though the latter has two or more contracts with the owner.⁹¹

statements, one to be filed by all claimants, and the other, a preliminary statement of an intention to perform labor or to furnish labor or materials and to claim a lien, to be filed by subcontractors, laborers, and materialmen, have been construed to make the filing of the former statement indispensable⁹² and the filing of the latter permissive.⁹³

Succession in interest of owner or contractor. Where a firm to which, as owner, the materials were to be furnished was converted into a corporation before the contract was completed, a single lien account cannot be filed covering what was furnished both before and after the incorporation.⁹⁴ However, where the original contractor dies, and his executor completes the building contract, a subcontractor may include in a single lien claim all the work done and materials supplied by him whether for or to the contractor or the executor.⁹⁵

§ 134. — Two or More Buildings or Improvements

- a In general
- b On same lot or parcel
- c On separate lots or parcels

a. In General

Whether a single lien may be filed to cover work done on more than one building or structure depends on the terms of the particular statute involved.

with the construction or repair of several buildings⁹⁶ Under the statutes of other jurisdictions it is not permissible to file a single claim against several structures⁹⁷ unless all are intended to form a part of one plant⁹⁸ or come within some similar exception, as discussed infra subdivisions b, c of this section

Under some statutes a single claim may be filed covering several buildings or improvements on the same lot or tract of land Some statutes require separate claims to be filed unless the buildings are so connected in construction or intended use as to constitute one building.

Under some statutes, where several buildings or structures are erected on the same lot or tract of land, a single claim of lien may be filed covering all the property and including all the items,⁹⁹ whether the work was done or the materials furnished under one general contract¹ or under separate contracts;² but it is also permissible in such case to file a separate claim against each building,³ and under some statutes separate claims must be filed⁴ unless the buildings are so connected in construction⁵ or intended use⁶ as to constitute but one building⁷ or lienable unit⁸ within the meaning and intent of the law, as in the case of a dwelling with its appurtenant outbuildings⁹ or several buildings constituting a single plant¹⁰

It has been held that one single lien cannot cover several distinct alterations in the same building

made at different times and independent of each other¹¹

c. On Separate Lots or Parcels

- (1) In general
- (2) Contiguous lots

(1) In General

Under some statutes a single general lien may be filed against all the property for which labor and materials have been furnished under a single contract notwithstanding the improvements are made on separate lots which are not contiguous.

Under some statutes a single general lien may be filed against all the property for which labor and materials have been furnished under a single contract notwithstanding the improvements are made on separate lots¹² which are not contiguous,¹³ but under others a contrary rule obtains,¹⁴ at least where the lots are not contiguous¹⁵ At any rate, separate liens may be filed¹⁶ when the amount and value of the material going into each building is ascertained,¹⁷ even though the contract does not specify the amount and value of the material which is to be furnished for, or to go into, each building¹⁸

(2) Contiguous Lots

As a general rule one claim covering all the property may be filed for work done or materials furnished, under one general contract, on several structures on contiguous lots.

Although the lienor has the right to file a separate claim as to each piece of property if he prefers to do so,¹⁹ and under a few statutes is required to do so,²⁰ as a general rule it is not necessary to file separate claims, but one claim covering all the property and including all the work done or materials furnished is sufficient, where improvements are made under one general contract on several contiguous lots.²¹ The rule is applicable where the contiguous lots are owned by the same person,²² and in some, but not other, jurisdictions, where they are owned by different persons, as discussed infra § 136. On the other hand, where the work is done or the materials furnished under separate contracts relating to the different properties, a single lien claim covering all the properties cannot be filed although such properties are contiguous.²³

§ 135. — Double House

Except under a few statutes, separate lien claims need not be filed covering materials used in each side of a single building divided by a solid partition wall so as to make it two houses adapted and intended for separate use.

Where a building is constructed with a solid partition wall dividing it so as to make two houses adapted and intended for separate use, it is not necessary,²⁴ except under a few statutes,²⁵ that a separate certificate or claim of lien should be filed for the materials used in each half.

§ 136. — Properties of Different Owners

Under some statutes a single lien may and should be filed where several owners of contiguous properties jointly contract for the improvement of such properties.

Under some statutes a single lien cannot be claimed on two or more pieces of property belonging to different owners²⁶ even though the properties are contiguous²⁷ and the work was done or the materials furnished under an entire contract.²⁸ Under others, where the several owners of contiguous properties jointly contract for the improvement of their properties, a single lien covering all the prop-

"Contiguous lots"

(1) The word "contiguous" in statute providing that separate lien on each of two or more buildings, situated on contiguous lots, for work done or materials furnished, need not be filed, is used in its primary, usual, and ordinary sense as implying actual contact or connection, so that mere close proximity is insufficient, but there must be actual joining or touching of lots.—Roy F Stamm Electric Co v Hamilton-Brown Shoe Co, 171 S W 3d 580, 350 Mo 1178, 146 A L R 917

(2) "Contiguous lots" touch along a considerable part, while "adjacent lots" lie close to each other, but not necessarily in actual contact.—Tallapoosa Lumber Co v Copeland, 134 So 658, 223 Ala 41, 75 A L R 1325

(3) Other statements see 40 C J p 180 note 54 [b]

What constitutes general contract

(1) The words "erected under one general contract" as used in some statutes are not to be confined to cases where the owner may contract for the completion of the building in one general contract.

erties may²⁹ and should³⁰ be filed, or subcontractors may file a single apportioned lien against all the properties for which they have furnished labor or materials under a single contract with the contractor, although such properties belong to different owners³¹ However, separate claims should be filed where there are separate and distinct contracts with the different owners³² It has also been held that there can be no lien, where there are separate contracts between the contractor and owner, and an entire contract between the contractor and claimant³³

§ 137. Filing One or More Claims or Statements by Two or More Claimants

Some statutes permit or do not forbid, while others prohibit, a joint notice of lien to be filed by two or more claimants

Under some statutes a joint notice or claim of lien filed by two or more claimants is invalid,³⁴ but other statutes permit³⁵ or do not forbid³⁶ such joinder.

§ 138. Place for Filing

The notice or claim of lien must be filed with, or in the office of, the officer designated by the statute

The statutes of different jurisdictions variously provide, or at times have provided, for the filing of the claim, notice, or statement with, or in the office of, the recorder,³⁷ county clerk,³⁸ town clerk,³⁹ or the clerk of a designated court⁴⁰ A filing with different public officers is generally provided for in the case of a public improvement,⁴¹ and, where the Torrens Act is in force and applicable, the claim should be filed with the registrar of titles⁴² It is necessary to the perfection of the lien that the notice, claim, or statement should be filed with, or in the office of, the particular public officer designated by the statute⁴³ Also it is necessary that the claim should be filed in the proper county, town, or judicial district,⁴⁴ in the determination of which the situs of the property to be charged governs⁴⁵ Where the property extends into two or more counties, it has been held that the lien must be filed in every county wherein the property is located which the lien is designed to cover,⁴⁶ but other cases deny this⁴⁷ and hold that it is sufficient to file the lien in the county where the work was done or the materials were furnished⁴⁸

§ 139. Time for Filing

- a In general
- b As determined by status of claimant

a. In General

As a general rule the notice or claim of lien must be filed within the time limited by statute.

All the mechanics' lien statutes prescribe and limit the time for filing the claim, notice, or statement, and, as a general rule, the statutes are deemed mandatory in this respect,⁴⁹ and it is essential to the existence and validity of a mechanic's lien that the claim or statement shall be filed or recorded within the time limited by the statute⁵⁰ This is true even as between the parties⁵¹ However, under a few statutes a failure to file within the prescribed period does not defeat the lien as against the owner of the property,⁵² in the absence of an intervening encumbrance or transfer of the property,⁵³ but operates merely to postpone it to the rights of purchasers without notice and the claims of third persons which have arisen since the expiration of such time and before the claim is actually filed,⁵⁴ or to afford the owner protection with respect to payments made to the contractor after the expiration of such time and before the claim is filed⁵⁵

Premature filing A lien claim or statement filed before the time when the filing thereof is authorized by the statute is ineffectual and unenforceable⁵⁶ It has been held that the services for the rendering of which a lien is sought must have been rendered before the certificate is filed⁵⁷ However, some statutes expressly allow a filing before or during the performance of the contract or during the progress of the work, as discussed infra § 144

the statutory period in which to file his lien,⁵⁹ and the mere fact that he has postponed the filing of his lien until toward the end of the time limited for that purpose will not affect his statutory right,⁶⁰ no matter what may have been the motive which prompted such delay on his part.⁶¹ However, the right of a claimant to file his claim or affidavit at any time within the statutory period is restricted as against land registered under the Torrens Act and transferred to a bona fide purchaser within the statutory period,⁶² and it is necessary, in order to preserve his rights as against a prospective purchaser, to file what is known as a caveat giving notice to the prospective purchaser of a right to a lien.⁶³

Filing before serving notice or statement The validity of a lien is not affected by the fact that the claim or certificate is filed before the service on the owner of the statement⁶⁴ or notice⁶⁵ required by statute, where both the filing and the service are within the time limited therefor. However, where the statute provides for service of notice of intention on the owner a specified time before the filing of the lien, the lien may be filed only after such a notice has been served and the specified time has elapsed.⁶⁶

Estoppel. The owner may be estopped by his acts or representations to take advantage of the failure of a subcontractor to file his claim or notice of lien within the statutory period,⁶⁷ but merely standing by and permitting claimant to sleep on his rights does not estop the owner.⁶⁸

The statutes sometimes fix different periods for filing a claim of lien by different classes of claimants.

Some statutes make no distinction whatever among lienholders as to the time within which the lien shall be filed.⁶⁹ Other statutes, however, prescribe different periods for different classes of claimants.⁷⁰ Such statutes generally distinguish between, and prescribe different periods for the filing of the claims of, contractors and subcontractors,⁷¹ or contractors and other claimants.⁷² Under such statutes claimant may and must file his

(2) Where there was a building contract, the materialman had to record his lien within the specified time after the owner's registry of the acceptance of the work or of the contractor's default, or recordation of the architect's certificate of completion.—Lieber v Levy, 118 So 394, 165 La 949—Greater New Orleans Homestead Ass'n v Korner, supra claim or statement within the period allowed for the class to which he belongs⁷³

A person who has a contract directly with the owner or his agent to furnish materials or labor or both is an original or principal contractor within the meaning of some of such statutes,⁷⁴ this being so although the materialman furnishes the materials to the contractor,⁷⁵ but one who merely furnishes material to be used in the construction of a building is a materialman, whether the material is furnished direct to the owner or to another.⁷⁶ Materialmen and laborers are not "original contractors" within the meaning of other statutes, however, even though they contract directly with the owner.⁷⁷ Under some statutes a subcontractor furnishing materials and labor under a contract with the principal contractor is treated as a principal contractor where the contract between the owner and the principal contractor is not filed as required.⁷⁸ Under others, where the contractor abandons his contract, and the owner finishes the building in his own way on his own account and credit, and does not adopt the contract of the contractor or undertake to fulfill or complete it so as to become in effect substituted for the contractor, a subcontractor is obliged to file his lien within the prescribed time after the last furnishing of material to the contractor.⁷⁹

A few statutes allow a longer period for filing as against the owner than as against other creditors, encumbrancers, or purchasers.⁸⁰ Also some statutes allow a longer period as against purchasers

§ 140. — Before or after Certain Date in General

The statutes determine the date from which the time for filing a notice or claim of lien is to be computed

The statutes of different jurisdictions, and sometimes the statutes of the same jurisdiction, under changes or amendments thereof or in respect of different classes of claimants, fix different dates from which the period for filing the claim, notice, or statement is to be computed⁸² The date otherwise applicable continues to be applicable notwithstanding a transfer of the owner's title during the making of the improvement, the doing of the work, or the furnishing of the material,⁸³ a filing within the statutory period after the transfer of title is neither authorized nor required⁸⁴ Also the date otherwise applicable controls notwithstanding a change in the personnel of the contracting firm⁸⁵

When the date from which the period allowed for filing the lien claim is to run is established, the usual rules as to the computation of time govern.⁸⁶

§ 141. — Accrual or Maturity of Indebtedness

Under some statutes the accrual of the indebtedness fixes the date from which the time for filing the notice or claim of lien is computed.

Under some statutes the lien claim statement must be filed within a specified time after the indebtedness sought to be secured by the lien has accrued or become due,⁸⁷ filing before such time being held ineffectual⁸⁸ Some courts hold that, as used in a statute requiring the lien to be filed within a certain time "after the indebtedness shall have accrued," the quoted expression means within such time after the work is finished,⁸⁹ the last labor is performed,⁹⁰ or the last material is furnished⁹¹ or installed in the premises,⁹² rather than when the debt is due,⁹³ although it has also been held by such courts that, where materials are furnished by a person not contracting directly with the owner, the question is when the indebtedness accrues against the building,⁹⁴ and that it so accrues when the material is placed in the building,⁹⁵ rather than when it is sold and delivered to the contractor or subcontractor.⁹⁶

Other courts hold that the indebtedness accrues within the meaning of such a statute when it comes to maturity so as to be due and payable⁹⁷ under the contract,⁹⁸ and that, where credit is given, the period runs from the time when the credit expires.⁹⁹ Under a contract for payment in installments containing an acceleration clause, default in payment under such clause does not mature the entire debt so as to start the time running for the filing of the lien¹ unless the claimant elects so to treat the default by declaring the entire debt to be due.² Some statutes provide that, when material is furnished, the indebtedness shall be deemed to have accrued at the date of the last delivery of such material³ unless there is an agreement to pay for such material at a specified time.⁴

Filing before money payable According to some authorities the claim or statement should not be filed before the money claimed is due and payable,⁵ but according to other authorities the claim may be filed when the money becomes due, although by the terms of the contract it is not payable until some time thereafter.⁶

the completion of the building as an alternative date from which the period may be computed, at least as to certain claimants,⁸ other dates mentioned in the same statutes being the completion or performance of the labor or the furnishing of the materials, or the cessation of work or the furnishing of materials, as discussed infra § 144.

Some courts have held, where the statute requires the claim to be filed within a certain time after completion of the building, that a filing before the building is completed is premature and confers no rights⁹ unless the contract is for the construction only of a portion of the building and such portion has been completed,¹⁰ but other courts have taken a contrary view.¹¹ At any rate, where the statute allows merely a certain period after the doing of the work or the furnishing of the materials, the completion of the entire building is not a prerequisite to the right of a person to file his lien claim¹² unless his contract is not performed until then.¹³ Where a lien claimant of a particular class is required to file his lien within a limited time after the completion of his contract, he must do so, as discussed infra § 144 b, even though the building is not complete.¹⁴

On the other hand, where the statute makes the completion of the building the time from which the period for filing the notice of lien runs, a notice filed within such period after such completion is in time, although more than the period allowed has elapsed since claimant completed his work;¹⁵ and this is so although the statute fixes the completion or performance of the work as an alternative time from which the period is to be computed.¹⁶ Under such a statute, however, the lien may be filed within the required time after the furnishing of the labor or materials although before substantial completion of the building.¹⁷

b. What Constitutes or Is Equivalent to Completion

- (1) In general
- (2) Abandonment or cessation of work generally
- (3) Acceptance or occupation of building
- (4) Notice of completion

(1) In General

Completion of a building which starts the period for filing the notice or claim of lien running may be either actual or constructive.

When a building is completed within the meaning of the statute is a question to be determined in view of the circumstances of each case.¹⁸ The parties may by mutual consent make the completion of the building depend on any lawful event that may suit their purposes.¹⁹ The completion of the building or improvement, within the meaning of the statutes under consideration, may be either actual²⁰

Purchasers and encumbrancers

Statute requiring claim to be filed within specified period after completion of building does not mean that claim must be filed within time specified after completion of work only to protect lien claimant against purchasers and encumbrancers who become such after expiration of the period.—Brown v Brown & Co., 160 S W 2d 431, 25 Tenn App 609

or constructive,²¹ a constructive completion arising from facts which are declared by statute to be equivalent to completion.²² There is also a constructive completion of the building where performance of the contract is rendered impossible through no fault of the contractor,²³ as in a case where a receiver is appointed for the owner of the property.²⁴ The time for filing the claim runs from such a constructive completion although work is thereafter resumed on the building.²⁵

A building may be deemed completed, with reference to the time for filing lien claims or statements, when it is substantially completed,²⁶ notwithstanding trivial imperfections²⁷ or omissions,²⁸ but it is not completed while work of considerable value and importance remains to be done,²⁹ although the unfinished part constitutes a mere convenience and the building may be used without it.³⁰

Estoppel of owner If the owner intentionally leads the lien claimant to believe that the building is not completed, and the lien claimant relies on the representations, the owner is estopped to assert the earlier completion of the building.³¹

(2) Abandonment or Cessation of Work Generally

Permanent abandonment of the work on a building is generally deemed a completion of the building, sometimes by reason of express provision of the statute, for the purpose of fixing the time for filing a claim of lien.

The permanent abandonment of work on a building is deemed a completion of the building for the purpose of fixing the time for filing a claim of lien,³² provided the time of abandonment can be fixed,³³ if, under some statutes, the abandonment is through fault of the owner and without fault of the lien claimant.³⁴ It has been held that, where a contractor abandons his contract after having done work thereon, subcontractors and materialmen must file their claims within the required time thereafter and cannot wait until the work is completed by the owner or under a new contract with another contractor.³⁵ In order to constitute an abandonment within the rule there must be a conclusion or intention by the participants to cease operations,³⁶ permanently or indefinitely,³⁷ to the knowledge of the lien claimant³⁸ A mere temporary suspension in the doing of the work or the furnishing of materials is not such an abandonment as will start the time running in which claimant must file his notice³⁹

The statutes of a few states expressly provide that cessation from labor for a specified time shall be deemed equivalent to a completion⁴⁰ The completion arising from facts bringing the case within such a statute is constructive,⁴¹ the statute does not apply to a cessation of labor resulting from actual completion⁴² In order to bring a case within such a statute there must be a cessation of labor⁴³ for the time specified in the statute⁴⁴

(3) Acceptance or Occupation of Building

Acceptance of the building, or occupation and use thereof, by the owner are equivalent to completion under some of the statutes fixing the time for filing a lien claim.

Under some statutes the occupation or use of the building by the owner is deemed equivalent to, or conclusive evidence of, completion,⁴⁵ at least in the case of contractors,⁴⁶ but in order to have this effect the occupation must be open, entire, and exclusive,⁴⁷ and of such a character as to be inconsistent with a continuance by the contractor in the completion of his contract⁴⁸ In order to be equivalent to completion, within the meaning of some of the statutes, the occupation by the owner of the building must be accompanied by a cessation of labor thereon,⁴⁹ the statutory period is not started running by the occupation or use by the owner of the building or improvement while work thereon is still in progress⁵⁰ or by the taking possession of the building by the owner, not for the purpose of occupying or using it, but for the purpose of completing the work abandoned by the contractor.⁵¹

always,⁵³ the statutory period is computed from the date when the building is accepted by the owner. An owner's refusal to make a certain payment under the contract until the contractor had settled with all lien claimants has been held not a contemporaneous construction as to the date of acceptance of the building.⁵⁴ Under some of the statutes an absolute cessation of labor for a specified period of time must accompany the acceptance of the building by the owner in order to constitute a completion.⁵⁵

(4) Notice of Completion

Under some statutes a notice of completion filed by the owner within a specified time after completion of the building or cessation of labor constitutes completion for the purpose of computing the time for filing the notice or claim of lien. A longer period to file the lien is permitted on failure of the owner to file the notice of completion.

Some statutes provide that the owner shall, within a specified number of days after the completion of the building or improvement⁵⁶ or after the cessation of labor thereon for a specified period,⁵⁷ file for record in a specified county office a notice stating the date of such completion or cessation. Such statutes provide that the filing of the notice shall be deemed equivalent to a completion,⁵⁸ and that, where the notice is not filed, claimants shall file their claims of lien within a specified period, longer than is otherwise permissible, after the completion of the building or improvement.⁵⁹ In order to be effective, the notice of completion must comply with the provision of the statute.⁶⁰

§ 143. — Commencement of Work or of Furnishing Material

Under some statutes the claim of lien must be filed within a specified time after the commencement of the work or the furnishing of the materials.

a. Completion or Cessation of Work or Furnishing of Materials

(1) In general

(2) What constitutes furnishing last material or labor

(1) In General

Under many statutes the period for filing the claim of lien runs from the completion or cessation of the work or furnishing of the materials, or from the date when the last item of work or materials is done, performed, or furnished

Under numerous statutory provisions, varying somewhat in phraseology, but not in effect, the statutory period for filing a claim, notice, or statement of a lien is computed, at least in respect of particular classes of claimants, from the completion⁶² or cessation⁶³ of the work, labor, or furnishing of the materials, or from the date when the last item of work, labor, or materials is done, performed, or furnished⁶⁴. Where the last item in a lien statement is not proved, the claim is nevertheless valid

Absence of contract or recordation

(1) Under some statutes, where the owner or his agent undertakes the work of construction, improvement, or repair for the account of the owner, for which no contract has been entered into or recorded, the claim for a lien by anyone furnishing services or material or performing labor on the job must be recorded within a specified time after the last delivery of all the materials, or last performance of all services or labor done, to complete the job, and, if so recorded, is sufficient—H R Hayes Lumber Co v H M Jones Drilling Co, 148 So 899, 177 La 626—Bell v Lieber, 135 So 871, 169 La 731—Hortman-Salmen Co v White, 123 So 715, 168 La 1067—Hicks v Tate, La App, 7 So 2d 737, followed in N O Nelson Co v Tate, 7 So 2d 740—Rex Electric Co v Glorioso 140 So 236, 19 La App 712, —Cox v Rockhold, 128 So 702, 14 La App 170—Shreveport Long Leaf Lumber Co v Spurlock, 120 So 126, 9 La App 224

(2) Filing as provided by this statute was held necessary where the contract involved was verbal—Hicks v Tate, La App, 7 So 2d 737, followed in N O Nelson Co v Tate, 7 So 2d 740

(3) Thereunder, last labor performed or material furnished refers to that performed or furnished by anyone to complete the work on the building, not necessarily to the last labor performed or materials furnished by claimant—National Homestead Ass'n v Graham, 147 So 348, 176 La 1062

(4) Lien for material used in repairing roof, filed within sixty days after last delivery of material which was necessary to complete repair job was held valid as against contention that such material was for patching

if the statement is filed within the specified time after the last item stated and proved,⁶⁵ but, where only the last item was furnished within the statutory period before the filing, the whole proceeding must fail unless the right to recover for that item under the lien as filed can be sustained⁶⁶

(2) What Constitutes Furnishing Last Material or Labor

As a general rule, the last materials are furnished, so as to start the statutory period running for filing a claim of lien, on the date of the last actual delivery on the premises or at some point where title to the materials passes from the seller to the purchaser. The last work or labor performed is the last work or labor performed to complete the building contract.

The last materials are furnished, within the meaning of the statutes under consideration, so as to start the running of the statutory period for filing the claim, on the date of the last actual delivery⁶⁷ on the premises,⁶⁸ or near the place where the building is to be constructed,⁶⁹ or at some point where the title to the material passes from the seller to the purchaser⁷⁰. While in some,⁷¹ although not other,⁷² cases it is held that the statutory period may be computed from the last delivery of materials only when such materials are used in the building, where the last material furnished is so used, ordinarily the period is not to be computed from the time of such use,⁷³ but, under special circumstances, the rule may be otherwise.⁷⁴ The time for filing the statement will not be computed from the date of the order for the materials,⁷⁵ but rather, it has been held, from the date on which the material was furnished, as shown by the invoice to the owner⁷⁶

Where materials are sent from a distance, it has been held that the date of their arrival at their destination and receipt by the person to whom they are furnished is the date on which they are furnished⁷⁷

Where the contract of sale calls for a delivery free on board of cars at a designated place, it has been held that the statutory period begins to run from the date when material is so loaded on board the cars,⁷⁸ but there is authority to the contrary⁷⁹

The last work or labor performed which starts the statutory period running is the last work or labor performed in good faith to complete the building contract⁸⁰. It has been held that, where the contract is regarded as completed, or where the contract is terminated by reason of abandonment or cancellation, the last labor performed is that performed on or prior to the completion or termination of the contract⁸¹

(6) Where governmental inspection and approval of the work done and materials furnished are necessary, the last delivery of materials or performance of labor has been held not to occur until after such inspection and approval—Shreveport Long Leaf Lumber Co v Spurlock, 120 So 126, 9 La App 224

(1) In General

Under some statutes the notice or claim of lien must be filed within a specified time after completion of the contract.

In some jurisdictions the statutes expressly provide, or at times have provided, at least in respect of certain classes of claimants, such as contractors and subcontractors, for the filing of the claim, notice, or statement within a specified period after the completion of the contract.⁸² Thereunder, the lien may be filed at any time after completion of the contract and until expiration of the time specified.⁸³ It has been held that the contract referred to in the statutes under consideration is the contract between the owner and the original contractor.⁸⁴ In other jurisdictions it is a general rule that, where work is done or materials furnished under a contract, the period does not begin to run until the contract is performed,⁸⁵ unless the contract is abandoned, terminated, or canceled by the other party, in which case the claim may be filed at once⁸⁶ and may and should be filed within the statutory period computed from the date of the abandonment, termination, or cancellation.⁸⁷ However, it has been held that the statutory period cannot be computed from the date of the termination of the contract where the last work was done or the last material was furnished prior to such date.⁸⁸

(b) Approval or acceptance of work, notice of completion

(a) In general

The question when a contract was completed is to be determined by ascertaining the conditions of the contract, the conduct of the parties with respect thereto, and the surrounding facts and circumstances.

The question when a contract was completed is to be determined by ascertaining the conditions of the contract,⁸⁹ the conduct of the parties with respect thereto,⁹⁰ and the surrounding facts and circumstances.⁹¹ In general, final completion of the contract dates from the time the last work demanded by the terms of the contract was done at the owner's request,⁹² or from the completion of the building under contract.⁹³ While the time for filing does not begin to run until the date of the completion of the entire contract,⁹⁴ it may start to run on substantial completion,⁹⁵ where the contract is substantially completed and full performance in minor details is dispensed with by the party to whom it is due⁹⁶ or is attributable to his failure to do what the contract requires of him,⁹⁷ a lien claim filed thereafter is not premature.

Where the parties agree to consider the work completed, although certain finishing touches are not then put on it, the period for filing a lien claim runs from that time and not from actual completion.⁹⁸ It has been held that a lien will not be defeated by the fact that claimant, acting in good sions on the question, an agreement,⁴¹ understanding,⁴² or reasonable expectation⁴³ that further labor or materials may or will be required and furnished

(2) Separate Contracts

As a general rule, separate and independent contracts cannot be tacked together to enlarge the time for filing a lien for work done or materials furnished under either.

Where labor or materials are furnished under separate contracts, the contracts cannot be tacked together so as to enlarge the time for filing a lien for what was done or furnished under either,⁴⁴ but a lien must be filed for what was done or furnished under each contract within the statutory period after its completion.⁴⁵ This is true, even though the contracts are between the same parties⁴⁶ or relate to the same building or improvement,⁴⁷ and a fortiori it is true where the contracts are between the same claimant and different parties⁴⁸ or where they relate to different buildings or improvements.⁴⁹

Some courts recognize exceptions to the rule, however, and hold that, although there are several contracts, a filing of the claim within the statutory period after the last item is sufficient as to all the items where the labor is done or materials furnished continuously,⁵⁰ or there is one continuous employment,⁵¹ or the work being done constitutes one continuous job,⁵² there being deemed to be a unity of purpose if not of contract.⁵³ Also, the rule has been relaxed where a materialman or subcontractor was without knowledge that the construction was under separate contracts between the owner and the contractor.⁵⁴

After completion of contract or improvement
The rule applies where, after the completion of the improvement and the contract therefor, a new contract is entered into in respect of another improvement,⁵⁵ such as another improvement not contemplated at the time of the original contract⁵⁶ or the completion thereof.⁵⁷ So, work done or materials furnished under a new and independent arrangement, made after the original contract or continuing employment has ended, does not set the time running so as to preserve a lien for the earlier work.⁵⁸

§ 145. Mode and Sufficiency of Filing and Recording

reason of any neglect or mistake of the recording officer in recording a notice or claim of lien, which has been filed by the claimant with the proper officer.

In general, the proper filing of a claim consists in placing the sworn statement in the custody of, and leaving such statement with, the proper officer for the purpose of recording.⁵⁹ Filing a copy of a notice of lien, instead of the original, has been held ineffective to create a lien.⁶⁰ Some statutes expressly designate the book in which mechanics' liens shall be recorded,⁶¹ or provide that they shall be recorded in a book kept for that purpose,⁶² but a statute of the latter class has been held not to make it necessary that the book in which they are recorded shall be kept exclusively for that purpose.⁶³ A filing by a person duly authorized by claimant is sufficient as against an objection that the claim was not filed by claimant,⁶⁴ especially where the claim is indorsed by the recorder as filed by claimant.⁶⁵ Also, it is immaterial that the physical act of recording the claim in the proper book is performed by an employee of the recording officer.⁶⁶

Rule inapplicable

Where foundation and floors of basement and garage were constructed by same contractor under separate contracts of which materialman had no knowledge, but more than five weeks elapsed after last delivery of material for foundation before contractor ordered material for floors, materialman had sufficient notice and could not include material for foundation in lien filed after expiration of statutory period from date of last delivery of such material on theory that furnishing of all materials constituted one continuous transaction.—Ideal Cement Stone Co v Dohse, 16 N.W. 2d 151, 145 Neb. 246

Under a few statutes a mere filing of the claim or notice is not sufficient,⁶⁷ since it is necessary that the claim or notice shall be actually and properly recorded in the proper book and the proper office within the required time,⁶⁸ but under most statutes it is held that, where claimant has filed his claim by leaving it with the proper officer for the purpose of recording, he has done all that is required of him⁶⁹ or is possible for him to do,⁷⁰ and that he does not lose his lien by reason of any neglect, default, or mistake of the recording officer.⁷¹ This is true as between the parties,⁷² and even, it has been held, as against third persons,⁷³ although the contrary has also been held with respect to subsequent bona fide purchasers or encumbrancers.⁷⁴ Thus, it has been held that the lien is not nullified

or lost, although the recording officer fails to collect the filing or recording fee in advance,⁷⁵ or wholly fails to record the lien,⁷⁶ or records it after the prescribed time for filing has expired,⁷⁷ or records only an abstract instead of spreading the lien in full on the record,⁷⁸ or records it in the wrong book,⁷⁹ or fails to enter a minute of the filing,⁸⁰ or to indorse the date and time of filing,⁸¹ or to make an abstract of it,⁸² or to forward a copy of the account filed to the secretary of state as required by law.⁸³

Index Under some statutes requiring the officer with whom claims or notices of liens are filed or recorded to keep an index thereof, it has been held that neither the owner⁸⁴ nor a third person⁸⁵ is bound to look beyond the index prescribed. Under others, however, actual indexing has been held not

Object of statute

Object of provision for indexing of memorandum or claim of a mechanic's lien in general index of deeds in name of owner of property and claimant of lien is to protect a purchaser who might acquire property after perfection of a mechanic's lien, or a subsequent lienor who might be affected thereby, and the provision was intended to conform recordation or registration of mechanics' liens with recordation or registration of deeds of trust and similar liens which are required to be indexed in same manner under registry act—Wallace v Brumback, 12 SE 2d 801, 177 Va 36

Claims sufficiently indexed

Claim of materialman for materials furnished to contractor for completion of contract with state university was held sufficiently indexed, where names under which claim was indexed included names of state university and contractor as required by statute—Royal Indemnity Co v. American District Steam Co, Tex Civ App, 88 SW 2d 1091, error dismissed essential to the validity of the lien, if the claim has been properly filed with the officer,⁸⁶ and a lien has been held valid as between the parties, although the prothonotary omitted to index their names alphabetically⁸⁷

§ 146. Notice of Filing or Service of Copy of Claim

a notice of the filing thereof, must be served on the owner.

Under some of the statutes the person claiming a mechanic's lien is required, at least where he is a subcontractor,⁸⁸ to serve on the owner⁸⁹ or his agent,⁹⁰ if he can be found within the county,⁹¹ a copy of the claim, statement, notice, or affidavit,⁹²

86. Tex.—Royal Indemnity Co v American District Steam Co, supra

Reason for rule

(1) Indexing of materialman's claim is unnecessary to create valid lien, since statute imposed on claimant duty only to file proper claim and imposed on clerk duty of indexing—Royal Indemnity Co v American District Steam Co, supra

Owner at particular time

(1) Statute requiring service of copy of claim of lien on "owner" refers to person owning premises when claim is made or filed—Lewis Mfg Co v Lee, 256 NW 457, 268 Mich 383—Strand Lumber Co v Dostie, 245 NW 777, 260 Mich 422—Peninsular Stove Co, 197 NW 693, 226 Mich 130

(2) Hence, where deed of land contract vendee given to wife through third party and recorded prior to filing of mechanics' lien claim became operative on delivery to vendee of deed of land contract vendor held in escrow, wife became owner enti-

(3) Where lien is claimed against building only, notice of filing of lien is not required to be given to one who became owner subsequent to filing of lien claim and before filing bill for foreclosure—Lewis Mfg Co v Lee, supra—Strand Lumber Co v Dostie, supra

Corporate owner

Proof of service of statement of mechanic's lien on named persons, without proof that such persons were officers or agents of corporation to which materials were furnished, was held insufficient proof of valid service as basis for lien—Bezdol v Beach Development Co, 244 NW 204, 259 Mich 693

Joint ownership

(1) Where the property is owned jointly by two or more persons, each coowner must be served for the lien to be effective against the interest of each

Pa.—Hamilton v LeSueur, 46 Pa Dist & Co 516, 24 Erie 341

(2) However, fact that joint ownership was vested in two persons has been held not to require posting of two copies of claim of mechanic's lien instead of one—Hurd v Meyer, 242 NW 882, 259 Mich 190

Joint owner as agent

Where a notice of filing of mechanic's lien was sent by registered mail to the place of business of two tenants in common of property and post office receipt was signed by one cotenant for himself and as agent of the other, such notice was insufficient to effect a lien as to such other cotenant, who did not see or receive a copy of the affidavit and did not authorize first cotenant to receive statutory notice for him—Martin Co v Frautschi, 43 NE 2d 514, 69 Ohio App 283

Resident owner

(1) Placing of copy of affidavit

(2) Delivery of copy of affidavit for mechanic's lien at usual place of residence of owner of realty was held not sufficient under statute requiring service on owner, or, if owner cannot be found in county, by posting on premises—Crane Co v Koper Heating Co, 5 NE 2d 238, 53 Ohio App 403

Owner not in county

Duplicate or copy

(1) A duplicate of the bill of particulars filed to secure the lien must be served according to the provisions of some statutes—Berry v McAdams, 55 SW 1112, 93 Tex 431—40 C J p 184 note 14 [a]

(2) The expression "duplicate copies of a notice and claim of lien," as used in the statute, has been construed to mean duplicate notice and

or a written⁹³ notice of the filing thereof⁹⁴ at or within a specified time⁹⁵ Where the statute does not specify the time for serving the copy of the claim or the notice of the filing, service may and must be made within a reasonable time,⁹⁶ but need not be made within the statutory time for filing the claim⁹⁷

Except in some jurisdictions,⁹⁸ compliance with the statutes respecting service of the notice or copy of the claim is essential to the validity of the lien,⁹⁹ but substantial compliance is sufficient¹ The notice must be given irrespective of actual notice or knowledge on the part of the owner² Where an insufficient statement is filed and a copy thereof is served on the owner, and subsequently a new and sufficient statement is filed, a copy of such new and sufficient statement must be served on the owner in order to preserve the lien³ However, the owner alone may insist on the notice,⁴ and, since it is for his benefit,⁵ he may waive it⁶ or estop himself by conduct from questioning the sufficiency of the service⁷ Under some of the statutes, a failure to serve the owner with a statement of the claim does not affect the validity of the lien of workmen or materialmen if the building contract between the owner and contractor was not recorded⁸

Service by mail is sufficient under some statutes⁹ However, under other statutes service by mailing a copy to a person at a place outside the county is insufficient¹⁰ Some statutes require the filing of an affidavit setting forth the fact and manner of service,¹¹ and a failure to comply with this requirement

Amendments of the notice of filing,¹³ or of the affidavit of service thereof,¹⁴ are permissible under some statutes

Notice of intention to file lien distinguished A notice of the filing of a lien is distinct from,¹⁵ and additional to,¹⁶ a notice of intention to file a lien, as discussed supra § 120.

§ 147. Withdrawal after Filing

After due recording of the lien claim, the withdrawal of the original paper does not destroy the lien

A temporary withdrawal of the lien claim after its filing will not defeat the lien as between the parties,¹⁷ and, where the lien claim or an abstract thereof has been duly recorded as required by law, the withdrawal of the original paper from the files will neither destroy the lien¹⁸ nor defeat the constructive notice to all persons resulting from the record¹⁹

§ 148. Renewal or Extension of Period in General

The time for filing a notice or claim of lien cannot be extended by agreement of the parties

It has been held that a court has no jurisdiction to give leave to file a lien nunc pro tunc after the time allowed by statute for such filing has expired²⁰ The time for filing a mechanic's lien claim cannot be extended by agreement of the parties,²¹ as by an agreement made after payment became due under the contract to extend the time for payment,²² and a fortiori a mere agreement not to press for payment for a reasonable time does not extend the time²³ Similarly, the fact that the money account was permitted to run does not extend the time for filing the notice or claim of lien²⁴ However, an owner permitting the delivery of materials under an agreement to extend the time for filing is estopped to assert that the lien was filed too late,²⁵ as is the grantee of such owner,²⁶ it is otherwise with respect to a purchaser from the owner who was not a party to the agreement and had no notice thereof or of deliveries thereunder.²⁷

An unintentional omission to deliver a part of machinery purchased cannot extend the time of the accrual of the indebtedness²⁸ or the time within which the lien claim must be filed,²⁹ since such omission is a matter of which only the purchaser can take advantage³⁰

§ 149. — Doing or Furnishing Further Work or Materials

- a In general
- b In performance of contract
- c To meet requirements of public authorities
- d To repair damage caused by other persons

a. In General

As a general rule, once the time for filing the notice or claim of lien has begun to run, claimant cannot thereafter extend the time by doing or furnishing additional small items.

Where the period allowed by statute for filing a lien has commenced to run, claimant cannot thereafter extend the time by doing or furnishing small items and thereby fixing a date from which the period must commence anew to run,³¹ especially materials⁴² Thus, labor gratuitously performed cannot have the effect of extending the time for filing a lien for what was done or furnished under a contract,⁴³ nor can a person extend the time for filing his lien claim by gratuitously repairing or replacing defective work or articles previously furnished and charged for.⁴⁴ However, a lien for the new article may be established, if the claim therefor is filed in the required time after its installation⁴⁵

It has been held in some cases that extra work done or additional materials furnished at the request of the owner after the full completion of the original contract may extend the time for filing a lien claim for all the work,⁴⁶ but in other cases the contrary is held.⁴⁷ The question whether the work done is sufficient to extend the time for filing the lien does not arise where the work is done by a person other than claimant, or for a new owner, and the statute requires the filing of the claim within a specified period of time after claimant has ceased to labor or furnish materials⁴⁸

b. In Performance of Contract

Where, even after the contract is substantially completed, claimant does further work or furnishes further material which is necessary for the proper performance of his contract, and this is done in good faith at the demand or request of the owner or for the purpose of fully completing the contract, the period for filing the lien will run from the doing of such work or the furnishing of such materials, regardless of the value thereof.

Where, even after the contract is substantially completed, claimant does further work or furnishes further material which is necessary for the proper performance of his contract,⁴⁹ and this is done in tention of completing the job, permits the filing of the claim or statement within the specified time after the doing of the last work, although done with the ulterior purpose of saving the lien and postponed until long after the bulk of the work has been completed ⁶⁶

Effect of guarantee Work done or repairs made pursuant to a time guarantee of the work done under the contract has been held not to extend the time for filing the notice of lien ⁶⁷

c. To Meet Requirements of Public Authorities

The time to file the notice of lien may be computed from the time additional work is done to meet the requirements of public authorities.

The statutory period for filing the notice or claim of lien may be computed from the time additional work is done to meet the requirements of the public authorities,⁶⁸ although in so holding the courts do not always place their decisions on the same grounds ⁶⁹ It has been held otherwise with respect to a trivial matter not called for by the contract ⁷⁰

d. To Repair Damage Caused by Other Persons

Repair of damage caused by another which the claimant was under no obligation to make does not constitute the last work done under the contract.

Where, after claimant's work is done, certain damage is caused by workmen engaged in other work on the same improvement, and he is under no obligation to make good, the repairing of the damage cannot be considered the last item of work done under the contract,⁷¹ and, even though the contract for a particular class of work may expressly or by custom include the making of repairs necessitated by other and subsequent work on the building, nevertheless the making of repairs by claimant may not extend the time for filing his lien under the circumstances of the particular case.⁷²

In order to be sufficient, a claim, notice, or statement must comply with the statutory requirements.⁷³ Accordingly the validity of the claim, notice, or statement depends on a substantial compliance with the statutory provisions,⁷⁴ and a substantial compliance therewith is sufficient,⁷⁵ especially where no one has been misled to his prejudice,⁷⁶ as is usually the case where only the rights of the owner or the original parties to the contract are involved.⁷⁷ It has sometimes been held that less strictness of compliance with the statutory requirements is required as against the owner⁷⁸ or a purchaser pendente lite⁷⁹ than as against a third person,⁸⁰ such as a mortgagee.⁸¹

Covenant

Matters to be stated in general It has been held that the claim, notice, account, affidavit, or statement should show on its face all the facts necessary to create and fix the lien,⁸² but there is also some authority to the contrary.⁸³ At any rate all the matters which the statute requires to be stated must be substantially set forth,⁸⁴ regardless of the knowledge of the owner,⁸⁵ since the statute is mandatory in this respect.⁸⁶ Conversely, matters as to which the statute requires nothing to be stated may properly be omitted,⁸⁷ but the fact that the claim states

In some jurisdictions, in order that a mechanic's lien claim may bind the estate of a married woman, it must show on its face every requisite to make it a valid claim against her.⁹⁰ Her coverture must explicitly appear,⁹¹ and the claim must show that the work or material was necessary for the improvement or repair of her separate estate⁹² and that it was so applied.⁹³

b. Form, Completeness, and Construction

A mechanic's lien statement is not required to be in any particular form, and a statement following the language of the statute or a form provided by statute is sufficient.

The lien statement is not required to be in any particular form,⁹⁴ and statutes relating to form have been held to be permissive rather than mandatory.⁹⁵ While a statement following the language of the statute or a form provided by statute is sufficient,⁹⁶ it is not necessary that the exact words of the statute should be used,⁹⁷ and a mere deviation from the generally used form will not invalidate the claim if it is otherwise sufficient.⁹⁸ At least as against the owner,⁹⁹ the lien will not be defeated because the claim or statement is awkwardly and inartistically drawn¹ or because of merely technical objections.² The definiteness and precision of a pleading are not necessary,³ certainty to a common intent is sufficient.⁴ However, the notice should disclose information from which those interested may determine the existence of a lien,⁵ and must contain information sufficient on inquiry to give the owner the necessary knowledge to enable him to determine the correctness of the claim.⁶

The statement must be complete and sufficient in and of itself without reference to extrinsic proof to supplement deficiencies in it,⁷ it cannot be aided by the clerk's docket⁸ or by the bill, complaint, or petition in a suit to enforce the lien.⁹ However, in determining its sufficiency, the lien statement must be construed as a whole,¹⁰ and an exhibit,¹¹ as well as the affidavit verifying the claim,¹² may

The statement will be liberally construed,¹³ and, if possible, so as to sustain the lien.¹⁴ Some courts have held that a most liberal rule should be applied in passing on the validity of the lien paper filed where the owner or his agent was actively concerned in ordering and looking after the delivery of the material furnished by claimant,¹⁵ but other courts deny that a more liberal rule should obtain in construing the notice of lien where claimant contracted directly with the owner¹⁶ or where the owner has actual knowledge of the matters involved,¹⁷ and it has been held that the same rules of construction should apply in determining the sufficiency of a claim filed by the original contractor who dealt with the owner, and a claim filed by a materialman who dealt with the contractor.¹⁸

Caption and address Where the statement contains all the statutory requisites, it is sufficient although there is no formal caption¹⁹ or although the caption is not in all particulars exactly correct.²⁰ It is not necessary that the statement be addressed to any particular person.²¹

§ 151. Statement of Claim of Lien in General

It has been both affirmed and denied that it is necessary to state expressly in the claim or statement that the claimant claims a mechanic's lien

It has been both affirmed²² and denied²³ that it is necessary to state expressly in the claim or statement that claimant claims a mechanic's lien. At any rate a statement that claimant "claims and holds a lien"²⁴ or that he claims or demands the benefit of the lien laws²⁵ is a sufficient statement that a lien is claimed. A lien account or statement must fairly apprise the owner and the public of the nature of the demand asserted as a lien,²⁶ as well as its amount, discussed infra § 153. A statement of the demand means something more than a statement of the amount claimed.²⁷ The mere fact that one who has a lien on a building claims also a lien on land which he cannot subject thereto will not defeat his lien on the buildings situated on the land²⁸ if they can be identified.²⁹

§ 152. Accrual of Lien

When so required by statute, the date when the amount claimed is due must be stated, but in the absence of such requirement it is not necessary to show the date of the maturity of the claimant's claim

Under some statutes the date from which the lien is claimed or the date of the commencement of the claim must be stated,³⁰ and a claimant is estopped to assert that the lien attached at an earlier day than that stated.³¹ Where the statute giving a mechanic's lien contemplates two classes of claims, due and not due, the notice should so describe the claim as to inform the public to which class it belongs,³² and ambiguities should operate to the prejudice of claimant rather than to that of the public.³³

When so required by statute, the date when the amount claimed is due must be stated,³⁴ but in the absence of a statutory requirement to that effect it has been held that it is not necessary to show the date of the maturity of claimant's claim,³⁵ and an erroneous statement of such date will not affect the lien where there was no fraudulent intent or improper motive and no one has been prejudiced thereby.³⁶ Failure to state that the claim is due does not impair the notice as between the original parties,³⁷ and therefore, as between such parties, the lien is not lost by a failure to state whether credit was or was not given.³⁸ A statement that the amount claimed is a lien against the building is a sufficient statement that it is a subsisting debt against the buyer of the material.³⁹

§ 153. Amount Due or to Become Due

- a In general
- b Erroneous statement

a. In General

As a general rule under the statutes the notice, claim, or statement which must be filed or recorded in order to perfect a mechanic's lien must set forth the amount due claimant.

As a general rule under the various statutes the notice, claim, or statement must set forth the amount due claimant,⁴⁰ the amount claimed to be due,⁴¹ the amount unpaid to the lienor,⁴² the amount of the demand,⁴³ or must fairly apprise the owner and the public of the nature, as discussed supra § 151, and amount⁴⁴ of the demand asserted as a lien. The lien affidavit and account filed must show that a sum certain is due,⁴⁵ and the amount claimed must be stated with definiteness and certainty⁴⁶. However, the definiteness of a pleading is not required,⁴⁷ the exact words of the statute need not be used in stating the amount,⁴⁸ and it is sufficient if from the whole statement, including all the papers filed, the amount due clearly appears, although the language used is not as apt or accurate as might be desirable⁴⁹.

Where the statement is that "the balance due and to become due" is a certain amount, and it sufficiently appears that the entire indebtedness has accrued, the words "to become due" should be disregarded as surplusage⁵⁰. A claim for extras furnished in the performance of a building contract may be properly included in a claim for a mechanic's lien for the amount due under the contract⁵¹. Also it is proper for the contractor to include in his claim amounts due from him to subcontractors⁵². A statement by one to whom a number of claims have been as-

On the other hand, where the statute requires claimant in setting out and recording his lien to state merely that he claims a lien on certain property, it has been held that he need not set forth the amount claimed for material furnished⁵⁴.

Interest. Where the amount of the claim is stated, the addition of the words "with interest" does not vitiate the lien notice,⁵⁵ and, if need be, they may be rejected as surplusage.⁵⁶

b. Erroneous Statement

Generally an error in stating the amount for which a lien is claimed will defeat the lien when, and only when, it is made knowingly, intentionally, or fraudulently.

As a general rule, an error in stating the amount for which a lien is claimed will defeat the lien when, and only when, it is made knowingly, intentionally, or fraudulently,⁵⁷ an error arising from mere mistake will not have this effect⁵⁸.

An understatement of the amount due when there is no bad faith and no prejudice to the owner or other lienholders merely causes loss of the lien for that part of the claim omitted⁵⁹. A mistake of claimant in crediting a discount for which there was no consideration does not preclude him from asserting the right to recover the value of the materials disregarding the discount ⁶⁰

It has been well established as a general rule that the fact that a claimant claims an amount greater than is really due to him will not defeat the lien where the error is not made willfully or with an intent to deceive or defraud but is due to an honest mistake ⁶¹ and no one is misled or prejudiced thereby ⁶². In such case the lien may be sustained and enforced pro tanto for the true amount to which claimant is entitled, ⁶³ provided such amount can be segregated from the aggregate amount claimed ⁶⁴

On the other hand, the entire lien of a claimant is defeated where he knowingly and willfully, intentionally, or fraudulently claims a larger amount than is due him, ⁶⁵ or where, through culpable negligence, he overstates the amount due him, ⁶⁶ as where he might have known by the exercise of reasonable diligence that the statement filed by him is not a true statement of his claim ⁶⁷

Refusal of enforcement by court of equity. In some cases it has been held that a court of equity is without power to deprive plaintiff of his lien by reason of his conduct in filing a claim for a larger amount than is found to be due, ⁶⁸ but in other cases it has been held that a court of equity will treat as insufficient a claim which is largely excessive, ⁶⁹ or that, where there is a willful and intentional overstatement of the amount due, a court of equity will refuse to enforce the lien on the principle that plaintiff comes into court with unclean hands ⁷⁰

§ 154. — Credits and Offsets

The statutes generally provide that the claim, notice, or statement which is filed or recorded in order to perfect a mechanic's lien shall set forth the amount due claimant after allowing all just and proper credits and offsets, and the intentional omission of credits which should be given will defeat the lien

70. Ala.—Byrum Hardware Co v. Jenkins Bldg Supply Co., 147 So 411, 226 Ala 448—Fleming v McDade, 93 So 618, 207 Ala 650

The statutes generally provide, in varying language, that the claim, notice, or statement shall set forth the amount due claimant after allowing all just and proper credits and offsets.⁷¹ Although the authorities are at variance on the question of what constitutes a fatal departure from the statute, they are agreed that it is not necessary to use the exact words of the statute in stating that all just credits and offsets have been allowed or deducted.⁷² While it is proper to state the whole amount which became due to claimant, and to give credit for any payments and offsets, and then state the balance remaining due and unpaid,⁷³ and it has been held necessary to state the account in this manner,⁷⁴ other decisions are to the effect that it is sufficient to state merely the balance claimed to be due,⁷⁵ without in terms declaring that all just credits have been given,⁷⁶ or to state that a certain sum is due, after allowing all just credits, deductions, and set-offs, without setting out any credits or deductions.⁷⁷ The statutes under consideration do not require the credits to be itemized.⁷⁸

Erroneous statements The receipt of payment is a fact particularly within claimant's knowledge⁷⁹ and he is bound to state it truly.⁸⁰ However, it is not every failure to credit payments properly that may be declared, as a matter of law, to render the lien account invalid.⁸¹ The intentional omission from the lien claim or statement of credits which should be given will defeat the lien.⁸² On the other hand, the lien is not lost where the omission is not willful,⁸³ intentional,⁸⁴ or negligent,⁸⁵ but is due to an inadvertence⁸⁶ or an honest mistake,⁸⁷ especially where the amount of the offset is only a small part of the contract price.⁸⁸ The lien will not be defeated by the omission of a credit as to which claimant has not accurate information⁸⁹ and is unable to get a statement,⁹⁰ or which is unliquidated and in dispute⁹¹ or not within the knowledge of claimant.⁹²

In some jurisdictions it has been held or recognized that the failure to state the proper credits is fatal where the error could have been avoided by the exercise of reasonable diligence,⁹³ but in other jurisdictions, it has been held that, under the statutes, the question is one of intention,⁹⁴ and that, where the error was unintentional, it does not vitiate the lien, even though there may have been gross carelessness on the part of claimant.⁹⁵ Under some circumstances a failure to credit land to be taken in payment does not render the lien invalid.⁹⁶

It has been held that an admittedly erroneous credit entry, which never in fact had been paid, will not defeat the lien for the amount of such credit when no one has been prejudiced thereby⁹⁷

Under a number of statutes a claimant who files one claim against two or more buildings or other improvements must designate the amount due, or which he claims to be due, on each of such buildings or improvements.

In a number of jurisdictions statutes have been enacted relating to the apportionment of the amount of a claim among several buildings,⁹⁸ such as statutes providing that a claimant who files one claim against two or more buildings or other improvements shall designate the amount due, or which he claims to be due, on each of such buildings or other improvements⁹⁹ However, owing to a difference in the wording of the statutes and the construction placed thereon, there is considerable divergence of holding in respect of questions of apportionment. In some instances in the same jurisdiction there has been a change in the statutes¹ or in the construction placed thereon² Some decisions have held that a compliance with such statutes is essential,³ but other decisions have regarded the statutes as permissive⁴ or held that a failure to apportion the claim merely postpones the lien to other specific liens on each improvement⁵ and does not entirely defeat it,⁶ unless one of the buildings belongs to a third person⁷ or unless the claim was not filed in time as to part of the buildings⁸

Where several buildings or improvements intended to be used together are erected on the same lot of land, it is not necessary to specify the amount due for labor or materials on each separately,⁹ but such a specification is necessary where the buildings or improvements are on separate lots or tracts,¹⁰ especially when owned by different persons¹¹ In some jurisdictions apportionment is unnecessary in case of a claim of lien on several buildings on adjoining lots,¹² while in other jurisdictions apportionment is permissible and necessary where the buildings or lots are adjoining,¹³ but is not permissible where they do not adjoin¹⁴ It has been held that a claim for a lien on a "double house," that is, a building erected at one time but completely divided by a solid partition wall into two houses intended for separate use and occupancy, need not be apportioned,¹⁵ but there is also authority to the contrary.¹⁶

Some statutes provide for an apportionment where several buildings are erected under one contract;¹⁷ but under other statutes a designation of the amount due on each building is deemed inapplicable where two or more buildings are constructed under one contract¹⁸ It has been held that the claim need not expressly state that the amount due is determined by apportionment, provided it is in fact so determined.¹⁹ The apportionment is to be made among houses or other buildings,²⁰ but not against pieces of ground upon which houses are yet to be erected.²¹

§ 156. Name, Address, and Status of Claimant

The claim, notice, or statement filed or recorded must show by whom the mechanic's lien is claimed, and, where so required by statute, the residence, business address, or principal place of business of the claimant.

The claim or statement filed or recorded must show by whom the mechanic's lien is claimed,²² but the courts are liberal in upholding claims or statements in this respect.²³ When so required by statute, the residence,²⁴ business address,²⁵ or principal place of business²⁶ of claimant must be stated in the notice, claim, or statement. In some decisions it has been held that it is not essential to state the capacity in which claimant did the work and in which he claims a lien,²⁷ and it has also been held that an error in this respect is not fatal,²⁸ but there is also authority to the contrary.²⁹ Various claims and affidavits have been construed as showing claimant to be a contractor.³⁰

§ 157. Names of Encumbrancers or Other Lienors

As a general rule the statutes do not require the lien statement to set forth the names of mortgagees, encumbrancers, or other lienors

§ 158. Notice to Owner

It is not necessary that the filed or recorded claim or statement set forth that a notice of intention to claim a mechanic's lien has been given unless the statute expressly requires such an averment.

Although the statute may require that claimant shall serve on the owner a notice of his intention to claim a lien as discussed supra § 121, it is not necessary that the filed or recorded claim or statement should set forth that such notice has been given³⁴ unless the statute expressly requires such an averment.³⁵

§ 159. Time of Filing

Under some statutes the statement or claim ordinarily must show that it is timely filed; under other statutes such averment is not required.

Under some statutes it has been held that it is necessary for the claim or statement to show on its face that it is timely filed after the completion of the work or furnishing of materials or after the accrual of the indebtedness³⁶ unless completion of the contract has been prevented,³⁷ and that the statement is ineffectual to perfect a lien if it shows affirmatively on its face that it is filed too late,³⁸ even though the fact is otherwise³⁹ Under other statutes, however, it has been held that the statement of claim need not aver or show that it was timely filed,⁴⁰ that the recitals in the statement as to time are not conclusive on the lienor,⁴¹ and that a claim which was in fact filed within the required time will not be defeated by dates, or averments as to time in the claim, which incorrectly show the contrary.⁴² At any rate, where the recitals or averments of the claim or statement are sufficient to show that it was filed within the requisite time, it is immaterial which rule prevails⁴³

§ 160. Nature of Improvement

Generally the claim or statement should specify the building or improvement on which the work was done or for which the materials were furnished.

Although such a specification is not necessary under some statutes,⁴⁴ as a general rule under the various statutes the claim or statement should specify the building or improvement on which the work was done or for which the materials were furnished,⁴⁵ so as to exclude work done or materials furnished for anything else,⁴⁶ and to show that the improvement is of a character for which a lien can be acquired under the statute.⁴⁷ Where the claim misdescribes the character of the improvement⁴⁸ or fails to mention the nature of the improvement⁴⁹ it is fatally defective unless the case falls within a statute providing that the lien shall not be affected by any inaccuracy in the particulars of the lien statement.⁵⁰

New structure or addition, alteration, or repair

Under some statutes the claim must specify on its face the class to which it belongs, whether for original erection and construction, or for addition, alteration, or repair.⁵¹ A claim on its face relating to one class will not support a lien relating to the other,⁵² but a claim which shows by apt words the class to which it belongs is sufficient,⁵³ although it does not use the statutory phrase.⁵⁴

§ 161. Description of Property or Improvement

a. Necessity

b. Sufficiency

a. Necessity

Statutes regulating the acquisition of mechanics' liens universally require that the lien notice, claim, or statement shall contain a description of the property on which the lien is claimed.

The statutes regulating the acquisition of mechanics' liens universally require that the lien notice, claim, or statement shall contain a description of the property on which the lien is claimed⁵⁵ for the purpose of having the papers on record afford a ready means of identification of the property⁵⁶ and to impart notice to any interested person that the lien attaches to a certain piece of property.⁵⁷

b. Sufficiency

- (1) In general
- (2) Errors and mistakes generally
- (3) Matters in aid of description
- (4) Area included in description
- (5) Location in respect of streets or other property
- (6) Numbers of lot and block or government subdivision
- (7) Failure to name political division or subdivision
- (8) Description of building or improvement generally
- (9) Lien on improvement alone

(1) In General

The test generally applied in determining the sufficiency of the description of the property in a lien notice, claim, or statement is whether it will enable one familiar with the locality to identify with reasonable certainty the property on which the lien is intended to be claimed.

The courts are liberal in upholding imperfect descriptions of the property in a lien notice, claim, or statement,⁵⁸ and are reluctant to set aside a mechanic's lien claim merely because of a loose description of the property⁵⁹ since the statutes generally contemplate that claimants should prepare their own papers.⁶⁰ While a description which would be sufficient in a deed will be sufficient in a mechanic's lien claim or notice,⁶¹ the same fullness and precision of description is not required in a lien statement as in the case of a conveyance⁶² or a judgment.⁶³ On the other hand the lien notice, claim, or statement must sufficiently identify the property,⁶⁴ with reasonable certainty,⁶⁵ and the claim must describe the land with sufficient accuracy to

Ill—Fifty-Ninth Street Lumber Co. v. Emery, 237 Ill App 416

An adequate and ascertainable description of the land on which a materialman's lien is claimed is essential to comply with the materialman's lien statute—Duncan Box & Lumber Co v Stewart, 30 S E 2d 391, 126 W Va 871.

Constructive notice

In claim for materialman's lien, description of property "sufficient for identification" requires description which, spread on public records, fairly and reasonably constitutes constructive notice—Ackerson v Albuquerque Lumber Co, 29 P 2d 714, 38 NM 191.

One description

A mechanic's lien notice is sufficient if the lienor selects one description, among the possible descriptions or forms of description, which will enable the owner or another lienor to identify the subject matter of the claim of lien, and furnishes a street number which will enable the owner or another lienor to locate the property, but it is not enough unless the notice meets both requirements—In re Friedal Corporation, C C A N Y, 53 F 2d 758

Knowledge by owner

Subcontractor was not precluded from enforcing lien because notice to owner failed to describe lot with reasonable certainty, where contractor named in notice was building only one building for owner, and owner admitted that he knew that subcontractor was furnishing material, and that notice was supposed to refer to home owner was building—Lentz Co v Dougherty, 261 NW. 218, 218 Wis 493.

enable the court to decree the sale⁶⁶ and the purchaser to find the land under such description⁶⁷

The test generally applied in determining the sufficiency of the description is whether it will enable one familiar with the locality to identify with reasonable certainty the property on which the lien is intended to be claimed⁶⁸. Other tests sometimes stated are whether the description is sufficient to apprise interested persons what property is sought to be charged,⁶⁹ or whether the description, when defective and insufficient of itself, affords a reliable clue to extrinsic facts which will render it definite and certain,⁷⁰ or whether the description aided by such extrinsic evidence as is suggested by the description itself would charge one dealing with real estate with notice of the claim for a lien⁷¹. It has been held sufficient to describe the building and the land;⁷² it is not necessary specially to describe an appurtenance belonging to either.⁷³

(2) Errors and Mistakes Generally

A mistake in the description of the property sought to be charged will not invalidate the mechanic's lien where it is not of a character to mislead and the property intended can be certainly identified.

A mistake in the description of the property sought to be charged will not invalidate the lien where it is not of a character to mislead and the property intended can be certainly identified⁷⁴. Thus false calls in the description are not fatal where, on their rejection, enough remains to identify the property.⁷⁵ A lien is rendered void by an intentional⁷⁶ or fraudulent⁷⁷ misdescription, or a description which is so grossly inaccurate as to show that no attempt was made to give a true and accurate description⁷⁸. A lien cannot be sustained when, after eliminating the false, inaccurate, or misleading parts of the claim or statement, there is left either no description⁷⁹ or a description which is not sufficient to identify with reasonable certainty the premises intended to be charged with the lien.⁸⁰

A description is obviously insufficient to create or preserve a lien on land where the land which may be subjected to the lien is not described at all, but the description given is entirely of land other than that improved.⁸¹

(3) Matters in Aid of Description

Various matters have been considered by the courts in upholding otherwise imperfect descriptions.

Matters taken into consideration and given weight in upholding an otherwise imperfect description include matters referred to in the description,⁸² the fact that the person sought to be charged could not have been misled,⁸³ the status of the persons who are parties to the suit and whose rights will be affected,⁸⁴ the fact that no other property answers the description in the notice,⁸⁵ and the fact that the owner named owns no other property in the locality.⁸⁶ Insufficiency of description in one part of the statement is cured by a correct description in a subsequent part.⁸⁷ A sufficient but imperfect description may be aided by averments in the complaint,⁸⁸ but a notice which is void for uncertainty may not be made effective as a lien by averment.⁸⁹ It has been held that proof of actual notice will not cure a fatally defective description.⁹⁰

(4) Area Included in Description

- (a) Inclusion of too much land
- (b) Failure to include all land subject to lien

(a) Inclusion of Too Much Land

Generally the fact that the claim or statement describes more land than is subject to the lien does not defeat the lien as to the land properly subject thereto if there is no fraudulent intent and no one is injured thereby.

As a general rule the fact that the claim or statement describes more land than is subject to the lien does not defeat the lien as to the land properly subject thereto if there is no fraudulent intent and no one is injured thereby.⁹¹ Where the tract on which the improvement is erected is of greater area than the statute allows to be subjected to the lien, it has been held that a claim or statement describing the entire tract, without specifically describing a por-

Where defendant claims that a mechanic's lien has been filed against more land than should be justly included thereon, the proper procedure to limit it is by petition and rule—Bickerton v Vaughn, 38 Pa Dist & Co 645, 3 Fay LJ 105, 88 Pittsb Leg J. 393

tion thereof which is of the permitted area, is sufficient,⁹² as in such case it is for the court to decide what portion of the land is to be subjected to the lien.⁹³ Under this rule all that is essential is that the portion of land or the building be designated in such language as will afford information concerning the situation of the property to be charged with the lien.⁹⁴ On the other hand, under such circumstances it has also been held that the claim or statement must describe the portion of the tract on which the lien is to be enforced.⁹⁵

(b) Failure to Include All Land Subject to Lien

The validity of the claim is not affected by the fact that it does not cover as much land as it might properly have covered.⁹⁶ In some jurisdictions it has been held that, where a house is built or other improvement is made on two or more lots and the lien claim describes less than the whole number of lots, the failure to describe the remaining lot or lots

does not defeat the lien on the lot or lots described,⁹⁷ but in other jurisdictions the contrary has been held,⁹⁸ at least where the work done and materials furnished cannot be apportioned between the lots.⁹⁹ It has been held that the lien may be enforced against the building and the land which properly goes with it, even though a part of the land covered by the building is not included in the description in the lien claim,¹ but it has also been held that where the claim describes part of, but less than, the entire tract, the balance of the tract not described is not subject to the lien,² and it has further been held that there is no lien where the building is substantially upon a lot not described and only to a slight extent upon the lot described.³

(5) Location in Respect of Streets or Other Property

Descriptions which include a statement of the location of the property with reference to certain named streets, or with respect to other property, have been upheld.

The courts have upheld descriptions including a statement of the location of the property with reference to certain named streets.⁴ In some,⁵ but not

It is sufficient that description points out and indicates premises, so that, by applying it to the land, the structure into which the materials are placed can be found and identified—Geisreiter v Standard Lumber Co, 63 S W 2d 347, 187 Ark 893—Brown v Turnage Hardware Co, 26 S W 2d 1114, 181 Ark 606

In the application of this principle the fact that the claim filed under the statute described more land than is subject to the lien does not defeat the lien as to the amount of land subject thereto under the statute where the claim and the account filed with it, duly verified, indicate the improvement, so that it can be identified by persons of ordinary intelligence, to hold otherwise would subject substance to form and deny the lien to persons clearly entitled thereto under the statute—Arkansas Foundry Co v American Portland Cement Co, 75 S W 2d 387, 189 Ark 779—Brown v Turnage Hardware Co, 26 S W 2d 1114, 181 Ark 606

other,⁶ cases a description stating that the property is located on a certain side of a named street between two other named streets has been held sufficient. A description stating the street and number may be sufficient,⁷ but not where only one street number is stated, the work was done on two lots and cannot be apportioned, and it does not appear that the number stated is commonly used to designate both lots.⁸ Some statutes expressly require the street and number, if known, to be stated where the property is located in a city or village.⁹ However, a description otherwise sufficient for purposes of identification is not rendered insufficient by a failure to state the street number in the absence of a showing that property in the community bears numbers.¹⁰ A slight error in spelling the name of the street on which the property is located is not fatal where no one is misled thereby.¹¹

A description of the property as adjoining that of other named persons is sufficient where there is no other property answering the description,¹² but not where only one person is named and he owns property on both sides of the street.¹³ In connection with other descriptive statements, a statement that the property adjoins in a named direction certain described premises¹⁴ or the property of another person¹⁵ may be sufficient.

(6) Numbers of Lot and Block or Government Subdivision

A description of city or town lots by lot and block numbers as appearing on a recorded plat to which reference is made is sufficient; and a description by government subdivisions giving the section numbers, etc., has also been held sufficient to identify and locate the property.

It is a sufficient description of city or town lots to give the lot and block numbers as appearing on a recorded plat to which reference is made,¹⁶ and a description by government subdivisions giving the section numbers, etc., has also been held sufficient to identify and locate the property with sufficient certainty to sustain the lien.¹⁷ A description by block number alone has been held sufficient in some,¹⁸ and insufficient in other,¹⁹ decisions. The lien has been held not to be defeated by a mistake in the number of the block²⁰ or section²¹ in which the property is located; but it has also been held that in so far as the notice of lien gives the wrong section number it is fatally defective.²²

In some,²³ but not other,²⁴ decisions a like holding has been made in respect of a mistake in the platted number of the lot. In some cases the lien has been held not to be defeated by a mistake in the name of the subdivision in which the property is lo-

(7) Failure to Name Political Division or Subdivision

A description which fails to name the political division or subdivision has been held insufficient, but such omission may not be fatal where the notice apprises the parties that a lien is claimed or where the description sufficiently identifies the property and distinguishes it from all others.

A description which does not name the state, county, city, borough, or town in which the property is situated has been held insufficient²⁷ However, a failure to name the state or territory, the legal subdivision thereof, or the city wherein the premises to be charged are situated may not be fatal,²⁸ provided there is sufficient in the notice, taken in connection with all the circumstances²⁹ and the place where the notice is filed or recorded,³⁰ to apprise persons dealing with the property that a lien is claimed thereon, or provided the description is sufficient to identify the property and to distinguish it from every other piece of property³¹

shall be described, and that the statement of claim shall set forth the locality of the building, house, or structure, with such description as may be sufficient to identify it.

A description of the buildings may aid in the identification of the property intended to be subjected to the lien,³² as where the land is not clearly described³³ It is sometimes expressly required that the building shall be described³⁴ and that the statement of claim shall contain and set forth the locality of the building, house, or structure,³⁵ with such description as may be sufficient to identify it³⁶ Although under the statute the property to be identified by the description in the claim or notice is the building or other improvement,³⁷ it may be identified by reference to the land upon which it is situated³⁸ Unless the statute requires the building to be described, a description of the land will include the buildings on it³⁹ and the lien will attach to both, although the buildings are not mentioned⁴⁰ In setting out the situation and peculiarities of a building, such matters of description as are adequate to identify the building are sufficient⁴¹ It is not necessary to state the name of the building,⁴² but, where the building has a well-known name which distinguishes it from all other buildings in the locality, the use of such name in the description may of itself serve as a sufficient identification of the

Separate or entire buildings. Where there are two or more buildings on the premises, the claim or notice may describe less,⁴⁴ but should not describe more,⁴⁵ than the number lienable, nor should it leave uncertain the building upon which the lien is claimed.⁴⁶ However, the inclusion by a materialman of old buildings on the same lot as the new building, in his certificate of lien, under a mistaken belief that part of his materials had been used in such old buildings, is such a mistake of fact as will not invalidate his lien on the new building.⁴⁷ A description of two or more buildings or structures as one building has been upheld where all were located on a parcel of land belonging to a single owner and where all were connected to some extent,⁴⁸ but not where they were separate buildings owned by different persons and located upon separate tracts of land⁴⁹ or where part of the buildings were new and part were old.⁵⁰

Where several structures form a single plant, it is better practice to state that fact clearly in the claim,⁵¹ but a failure to do so is not fatal.⁵² The description is insufficient where it describes a part of a single building as a separate building,⁵³ but where a stamp mill and a tramway from the mill to a mine are built, the mill, mine, and tramway do not constitute such an entire "structure" within the meaning of the statute as to invalidate a lien filed for materials used in erecting the mill and constructing the tramway because such lien was not filed against the mine also.⁵⁴

(9) Lien on Improvement Alone

When the lien can be enforced or is claimed only against the building, erection, or improvement, and not against the land on which it is situated, a description of such building, erection, or improvement sufficiently definite to enable the officer who may be called on to remove it from the premises to identify it from all other buildings, erections, or improvements on the premises is indispensable to obtaining the lien.

When the lien can be enforced or is claimed only against the building, erection, or improvement, and not against the land on which it is situated, a description of such building, erection, or improvement sufficiently definite and certain to enable the officer who may be called on to remove it from the premises to identify it from all other buildings, erections, or improvements on the premises is indispensable to obtaining the lien.⁵⁵ However, if the building is sufficiently described for the purposes of identification, the lien is not defeated by a failure to describe the land,⁵⁶ or by an imperfect or insufficient description of the land,⁵⁷ unless the jurisdiction is one in which, as discussed infra § 188, a lien cannot exist or be enforced against the structure separate from the land, in which case the question to be determined is the sufficiency of the description of the land and the building and not of the building alone.⁵⁸

contain the name of the owner of the property on which the lien is claimed.⁵⁹ In order to acquire a lien under a number of the statutes, however, the lien claim or statement must state the name of the owner,⁶⁰ part owner,⁶¹ or reputed owner⁶² of the property sought to be charged, provided the name is known to claimant.⁶³ Under such statutes where the owner's name is known a statement thereof is essential to the validity of the claim.⁶⁴ Where the name of the owner is unknown, it has been held that that fact ought to be stated,⁶⁵ but it has also been held that in such case the claim need aver nothing on the subject.⁶⁶

a corporation,⁷³ the state or corporation should be named as owner. If the property is owned by an unincorporated association the persons composing it should be described by their associate or joint name,⁷⁴ or otherwise so that they can be identified,⁷⁵ and where the owner is an individual doing business under a trade name it is proper to designate him by such name.⁷⁶ A statement naming as the owner the estate of a certain decedent has been held sufficient.⁷⁷ Likewise the naming of an heir as owner has been upheld.⁷⁸

In order to perfect a lien against the building or improvement alone, it is sufficient to name the owner of the building or improvement.⁷⁹

(b) Where Property Has Been Leased, Mortgaged, Sold, or Transferred

Where there has been a change of ownership, the rule obtaining in a majority of jurisdictions is that the person to be named as owner is the one who owns the property at the time when the claim of lien is made or filed.

In case there has been a change of ownership, the rule obtaining in a majority of jurisdictions is that the person to be named as owner is the one who owns the property at the time when the claim of lien is made or filed,⁸⁰ and the claim is sufficient if it names such person only.⁸¹ In some jurisdictions, however, it has been held that the name of the person who owned the property at the time when the contract was made⁸² or when the work was commenced⁸³ or completed⁸⁴ is the proper one to be given. It has also been held proper to name the original owner even after he has filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy⁸⁵ or made an assignment for the benefit of creditors,⁸⁶ and, where a lien claim has correctly named the real owners, the fact that at the time of the suit the land is in the name of a trustee has been deemed to be immaterial.⁸⁷

An owner of property who has made an executory contract of sale remains the owner nevertheless, as discussed in the CJS title Vendor and Purchaser § 106, also 66 C.J. p 702 note 35 to p 707 note 55, and is properly named as owner in the notice of lien.⁸⁸ Some statutes require that the statement shall include the name of any person under contract of purchase.⁸⁹

Mortgaged property Under some statutes it has been held that a mortgagee is not an owner in the sense that he is required to be named as such in the claim of lien,⁹⁰ but it has also been held that, where the lienor files his lien only against the mortgagor as owner, he can assert no claim against the mortgagee.⁹¹ Where a deed absolute on its face is intended as a mortgage, it has been held proper to name the grantee as owner or reputed owner,⁹² but it has also been held proper to name the grantor as owner⁹³

Leased property. Under some statutes, in order to perfect a lien, the claim or statement of lien must contain the name of a lessee in possession of the premises, provided the name is known to claimant⁹⁴ It has been held that a lien claim against a leasehold interest only need not name the owners of the fee.⁹⁵ It has also been held proper in a mechanics' lien statement to designate a lessee⁹⁶ or an administrator of a lessee⁹⁷ as "owner".

(3) Form of Statement

The lien statement must clearly and explicitly show who is the owner of the property.

The lien paper must clearly and explicitly show who is the owner of the property⁹⁸ It is not sufficient that the name of the owner appears in the lien paper incidentally,⁹⁹ or as part of the description of the property,¹ or as part of the caption, address, or title,² but that he is the owner of the property sought to be charged must appear in the body of the paper³ as an independent matter,⁴ either directly or by necessary inference.⁵ However, a substantial compliance with the statute in this respect is all that is required,⁶ and if, on considering the entire lien, it can be ascertained with reasonable certainty who the owner is it will be sufficient.⁷ Where it is necessarily to be implied from the language used in the lien paper that a certain person named therein is the owner of the property, this is sufficient, although it is not stated in positive and direct terms that such is the case.⁸

It is not necessary to state in so many words that a lien is claimed against the interest of any particular person or owner,⁹ but the statutory requirements are satisfied when the name of the person against whose interest the lien is claimed is given together with a statement of the facts subjecting his interest to the lien¹⁰ An allegation in a mechanic's lien claim that a married woman is the owner of a building will not be extended to the ground on which it is erected,¹¹ although as against a person sui juris an averment that the building belonged to a named person may be considered as an averment that the land also belonged to such person, in the absence of any evidence tending to show that the owner of the building was not also the owner of the land¹² A simple statement that the premises are the premises of the person named is a sufficient averment of ownership¹³

Alternative or conjunctive statements. Where the statute requires a statement of the name of the owner or reputed owner, it is sufficient to designate a particular person in the conjunctive as owner and reputed owner¹⁴ or in the alternative as owner or reputed owner¹⁵ The naming of two persons in the alternative as owner has been upheld.¹⁶

(4) Omission, Error, and Mistake

As a general proposition, in order to perfect a mechanic's lien, the ownership of the property sought to be charged must be truly stated in the claim or statement of lien sought to be charged must be truly stated in the claim or statement of lien¹⁷ Thus the failure to name any person as the owner¹⁸ or the failure to state the name of the owner required to be mentioned¹⁹ renders the claim or statement fatally defective, and notices stating the names of the owners but failing to allege them to be the owners have been held insufficient²⁰ However, the statutory requirement is satisfied by substantial accuracy,²¹ and the courts have been liberal in sustaining the lien where the owner has been incorrectly designated but no one has been misled²² The lien is not defeated by a mistake in the name of the owner,²³ or even by an honest mistake in naming the wrong person as the owner, believing him to be such²⁴ Accordingly, where claimant has in good faith named a particular person as reputed owner, under a statute allowing this, the lien is not lost if it turns out that another person is the real owner,²⁵ and a fortiori the lien is not defeated by naming the real owner as reputed owner²⁶

whether a failure to name all the owners, in case there are two or more, invalidates the lien, some decisions holding that it does²⁷ and others that it does not,²⁸ and the latter decisions take the view that the only effect of the omission of the names of part of the owners is to exempt the interests of such owners from the operation of the lien²⁹

At least where there is no dispute as to the identity of the person named,³⁰ a claim or statement is not rendered fatally defective by a mistake in,³¹ or the omission of,³² the initial letter of the owner's name, or by the use of the initial letter of his Christian name instead of the full name,³³ or by a statement of the surname alone, with the additional statement that the Christian name is unknown to claimant³⁴ So also a slight error in stating the name of a corporation which is the owner will not defeat the lien where the effect is not to mislead,³⁵ and even naming another corporation than the one sought to be charged is not fatal where the two are so closely connected as to be substantially the same company³⁶

A claim, notice, or statement which names the true owner or owners is not rendered invalid by the fact that it also names as owner another person who has no interest in the property,³⁷ nor is such claim, notice, or statement rendered void by the fact that it also names persons who have an interest in the property other than the owner.³⁸ On the other hand, where claimant knows the true owner and gives a wrong name in the statement, the lien is defeated,³⁹ and it has been held that, where claimant positively but mistakenly states in his claim that a certain person is the owner, he can excuse the mistake only by showing that it is justly chargeable to the true owner.⁴⁰ Naming claimant himself as owner is fatal.⁴¹

Under statutes so providing, an error in the notice or statement as to the name of the owner does not affect the existence of the lien,⁴² but such a statute refers to an unsuccessful attempt to state the name of the true owner, and not to a case where no attempt is made to name the persons against whose interests a lien is claimed.⁴³ Under such statutes the validity of the lien is preserved where the person named as owner has some title or interest, although a lesser estate than that of the fee,⁴⁴ but not where he has no interest,⁴⁵ in the latter case the lien cannot be extended against the person who is the true owner and who has not been named in the notice.⁴⁶

Married woman. Under some statutes a notice seeking to charge a married woman's separate estate must contain the name or names of the owner or owners of the property involved,⁴⁷ and a failure to comply therewith renders the notice insufficient.⁴⁸ A claim filed against the husband alone as owner and contractor, not referring to the wife or in any way making her a party to the record, gives no lien against her interest.⁴⁹ It is not necessary to name in the lien notice as an owner or reputed owner of the premises a wife who has only a potential or inchoate right of dower in the premises.⁵⁰ However, where the property is owned by husband and wife as an estate by the entirety, a claim naming the husband alone as owner is fatally defective,⁵¹ and this is also true in respect of community property when,⁵² but only when,⁵³ the claim shows on its face that claimant has knowledge that the wife has a community interest in the property. A statement which describes the property by naming the wife as the true owner is not rendered invalid by the fact that it also names as owner the husband who has no interest in the property.⁵⁴

Change of ownership. A claim stating the names of both the owner when claimant was employed or the contract was made and the owner when the claim is filed,⁵⁵ without stating at what time title passed from the one to the other,⁵⁶ is sufficient. A notice which does not name the vendor under an executory contract of sale as owner is fatally defective,⁵⁷ or at least is ineffective as against his interest.⁵⁸ It has been held, however, that a statement naming only the vendee was sufficient to create a lien on the building owned by him,⁵⁹ although the lien could not affect the land.⁶⁰

Leased property. A claim, notice, or affidavit stating only the name of the lessee creates no lien on the lessor's interest,⁶¹ and, conversely, a notice simply naming the lessor as owner, possessor, and occupant creates no lien on the estate of the lessee.⁶²

b. Estate or Interest of Owner

Generally it is not necessary to set forth in the claim or statement of lien the nature and extent of the owner's estate or interest in the property.

As a rule it is not necessary that the claim or statement of lien should set forth the nature and extent of the owner's estate or interest in the property.⁶³ However, a few statutes expressly require that the claim or notice shall state the interest of the owner, as far as known to the lienor,⁶⁴ or whether the lien is claimed against the fee itself or a lesser estate or interest.⁶⁵

§ 163. Contract or Consent of Owner

- a. In general
- b. Terms, conditions, and description of contract
- c. Annexing contract or copy thereof

a. In General

Unless required by statute, a mechanic's lien claim or statement need not show that the labor was performed or the materials furnished pursuant to a contract with, or with the consent of, the owner of the property or of the interest sought to be charged.

In the absence of statutory directions, a mechanic's lien claim or statement need not show that the labor was performed or the materials supplied pursuant to a contract with, or with the consent of, the owner of the property or of the interest sought to be charged.⁶⁶ The existence of any contract or consent of the owner such as will render his land subject to the lien is considered a matter of pleading and proof at the trial,⁶⁷ and, when included in the lien claim or statement, it will be treated as mere surplusage.⁶⁸ Under some statutes, however, it has been held that the lien notice, claim, or statement should show that the work was done or the materials furnished pursuant to a contract with, or with the consent of, the owner of the property or of the interest sought to be charged.⁶⁹

Where the owner is a married woman, it is necessary, under some statutes, that the claim show that the work or material was done or furnished at her instance and request,⁷⁰ on her contract,⁷¹ or by her authority and with her consent.⁷² Merely naming the husband as contractor is not sufficient.⁷³ Under other statutes, however, it is not necessary, where a husband or wife has contracted for improvements on the property of the other spouse, to recite that fact in the lien statement.⁷⁴ A statement in a lien notice regarding a written building contract between the contractor and husband, representing himself and wife, owners, does not prevent the contractor from proceeding against the husband alone and securing his lien on the in-

Liability created by contract. In the absence of statute, the lien claim or statement need not set forth the extent and character of the liability created by the contract.⁷⁶

Performance of contract. It has been held that, in the absence of any statutory requirement, it is not necessary that the claim show that claimant has performed his contract,⁷⁷ but there is authority tending to the contrary.⁷⁸

Unless required by statute, a mechanic's lien claim or statement need not set forth the terms or conditions of the contract.

In the absence of any statutory requirement, it is not necessary to set forth in a mechanic's lien claim or statement the terms or conditions of the contract.⁷⁹ With some variations in particular jurisdictions, some statutes require the lien claim to state the terms, time given, and conditions of claimant's contract with the owner or the contractor, as the case may be.⁸⁰ Such a requirement applies only to terms and conditions expressly agreed on; it does not apply to matters not agreed on,⁸¹ or to a promise or agreement implied by law.⁸²

In some decisions it has been held that it is not necessary to state whether or not the contract is in writing,⁸³ but it has also been held that, where the contract is in writing, that fact should be stated.⁸⁴ It seems that it is not necessary to state the date of the contract.⁸⁵ At any rate an incorrect statement of the date of claimant's contract does not invalidate the lien where the terms and conditions are correctly set forth and are sufficient to identify the contract referred to, and no one is misled by the error.⁸⁶

Sufficiency Under statutes requiring the terms, time given, and conditions of the contract to be stated, the claim or notice must state these matters plainly, unequivocally,⁸⁷ and correctly⁸⁸ or it will be fatally defective. The sufficiency of the claim or notice in this respect is to be ascertained by determining whether it substantially complies with the statutory requirement.⁸⁹

A general statement of what each party to the contract obligates himself to do, without incorporating all the minutiae and detail of the work to be done, is a sufficient compliance with the statutory requirement⁹⁰ However, the fact that the contract is with the owner instead of with the contractor will not excuse a lien claimant from fully and accurately stating the terms and conditions of the contract in the lien notice filed by him on the ground that the owner has knowledge of the terms⁹¹

A notice which refers to a copy of the contract attached to the notice and made a part thereof in which the terms, time given, and conditions are stated is sufficient⁹² Further, a notice of lien of a materialman which refers to the contract between the contractor and the owner of the building for the times of making payments to the materialman, which were to be made at the times when payments became due to the contractor, is not invalidated because it does not repeat the provisions of the principal contract on that subject where the principal contract has been duly recorded and the terms of payment can be ascertained therefrom.⁹³ A notice which in stating the terms of the contract refers to the plans and specifications, which are not attached to the notice, is not thereby rendered defective if it states their substance,⁹⁴ although it would be otherwise, if their substance were not stated⁹⁵

In the absence of a statutory requirement it is not necessary to set forth a copy of the contract in a mechanic's lien claim or statement⁹⁶ Under some statutes, however, where claimant had a written contract, he must file it or a copy thereof with his claim or statement,⁹⁷ and a failure to comply with the statute in this respect defeats the lien,⁹⁸ unless such compliance was prevented by the wrongful act of the person for whom the work was done⁹⁹ When the contract was a verbal one, the fact that by inadvertence or mistake claimant alleged in his affidavit that it was in writing does not estop him, in a suit to foreclose the lien, from alleging and proving that the contract was in fact a verbal one,¹ nor does it make the verified "account of items" filed to obtain a lien incompetent evidence²

The number of days of labor performed or furnished must be stated, under some statutes, in a claim for labor alone where there is an entire contract for both labor and materials,³ but not where the contract is for labor only⁴ However, where it is so provided by statute, no statement shall be deemed invalid or insufficient solely by reason of any inaccuracy in stating or failing to state the number of days' labor performed or furnished, provided there was no intention to mislead, and the parties entitled to notice of the statement were not in fact misled thereby⁵

§ 164. Name, Residence, and Status of Employer or Contractor

When required by statute, a mechanic's lien claim or statement must plainly state the name of the person by whom the claimant was employed, or for whom the labor was performed, or to whom the material was furnished

In the absence of statutory requirement it is not necessary for a mechanic's lien claim or notice to state the name of the person with whom the contract was made⁶ or by whom the claim is owing.⁷ However, it is generally required by statutes, varying somewhat in language, that the claim or statement shall state the name of the person by whom claimant was employed, or for whom the labor was performed, or to whom the material was furnished or, if claimant is a contractor or subcontractor, the person with whom his contract was made,⁸ and a failure to comply with this requirement defeats the lien,⁹ unless the failure is waived¹⁰ or cured.¹¹ Under some statutes the claim or notice must show from whom the account is due.¹² A contractor, however, need be named only when the contract was made with a builder distinct from the owner of the building.¹³ Where the name of the contractor is unknown, that fact should be stated as an excuse for not naming him.¹⁴

Sufficiency The claim, notice, or statement must plainly designate the person to whom the materials were furnished, by whom claimant was employed, or with whom the contract was made,¹⁵ and a merely incidental mention of the name of the contractor is not sufficient,¹⁶ but, if it is a necessary inference from the language used in the claim that the material was furnished to, or claimant was employed by, a person named therein, although this fact may not be directly stated, the claim is sufficient.¹⁷ Some courts have held that it is not necessary that the claim should show that the person with whom claimant contracted or to whom he furnished material, etc., stood in such a relation to the owner that he could bind the property,¹⁸ or at least that a failure to do so is not fatal,¹⁹ but other courts have also held that it is essential for the claim to show that the person to whom the materials were furnished, when other than the owner, sustained some contractual relation with the owner,²⁰ although they hold it sufficient to designate such person as "contractor,"²¹ without further stating his capacity or relation to the owner by the word "original" or other descriptive addition²²

Literal exactness and rigid adherence to precise form are not required²³ As a rule a mistake in the statement as to the name of the person with whom claimant contracted or by whom he was employed,²⁴ or a misconception or misdescription of the status of such person, or of his true relation to the owner,²⁵ will not defeat the lien, where there was no intention to deceive and no one has been misled to his detriment, but it is otherwise when the mistake is of such a character as to be clearly misleading,²⁶ and it has been held that, under a statute requiring that a notice of lien on moneys due to a contractor shall state the amount of the lien, and from whom it is due to claimant, a notice which states that the amount claimed is due by a contractor under a contract made with his agent, when the fact is that the alleged agent was a subcontractor, and not an agent, and that the money is due from him, and not from the contractor, is insufficient²⁷

Where there are several co-contractors, a claim or notice naming one only may be sufficient,²⁸ if a firm is the contractor, a notice naming as contractor only the individual partner with whom claimant dealt is not fatally defective,²⁹ and a claim correctly naming a subcontractor is not vitiated because it also names the contractor³⁰ While it has been held generally that a statement that the materials were furnished at the instance of the owner and the contractor is fatally defective where it subsequently appears that they were furnished by contract with the contractor alone,³¹ the contrary has been held under the circumstances of some cases.³²

Where under the statute a building contract is void because unrecorded, or because not containing proper provisions as to the payment of installments, and the labor and materials are deemed to have been done and furnished at the instance of the owner, it is immaterial whether the claim mentions the name of the owner or of the contractor³³

When required by statute, the lien claim or statement must set forth the nature and amount of the labor performed or materials furnished for which the lien is claimed.

Except in a few jurisdictions,³⁴ it is generally required that the claim, notice, or statement set forth the nature and amount of the labor performed or materials furnished for which the lien is claimed,³⁵

although this has been held to be necessary only when claimant contracted with the contractor and not when his contract was directly with the owner or his agent³⁶ What the work or materials were for which the lien is claimed must appear on the face of the claim, statement, notice, or account,³⁷ without resort to extrinsic evidence,³⁸ but, where this appears with reasonable certainty and precision, the statement is sufficient,³⁹ and in determining whether the claim or statement imparts the required information, in terms which cannot be misunderstood, concerning the nature or kind of labor or material furnished, all the papers constituting it, including the affidavit, the claim or statement proper, and an exhibit, bill of particulars, or other paper referred to therein and attached thereto, may be considered together.⁴⁰

The statement should so describe the labor and materials as fairly to apprise the owner of what he is charged with,⁴¹ enable him to determine the bona fides and reasonableness of the contract,⁴² and advise those who may have a legal interest in the subject as to the character and extent of the demand on which the claim to a lien is based⁴³ In the case of materials, the statement must be such as fairly to apprise the owner⁴⁴ and the public⁴⁵ of the nature and kind of the materials, and it has been held in some cases that the statement should be sufficient to enable one not a party to the contract to identify the things for which the lien is claimed⁴⁶ A statement merely reciting the kinds of materials furnished is to be distinguished from an itemized statement⁴⁷

The description of the work done or materials furnished must be as accurate as the circumstances will permit,⁴⁸ but precise accuracy as to the amount of material furnished is not essential to the validity of the statement⁴⁹ While a lien cannot be enforced for labor or material not embraced in the statement of claim, as considered infra § 172, the statement is not insufficient because it does not include all the labor performed or material furnished by claimant, where the labor or material omitted has been paid for and no lien is claimed therefor.⁵⁰

b. Use or Furnishing for Use

When required by statute, the lien claim or statement must state that the materials were furnished for the purpose of being used, or were used, in the building on which the lien is claimed

While a lien for materials is not defeated by the failure of the statement to set forth in express terms that the materials were furnished by claimant,⁵¹ it is defeated where the notice or statement does not show in any way that any of the materials were furnished or supplied,⁵² and a claim averring that some of the materials were not delivered, after they were manufactured, by reason of a notice by the owner preventing delivery, is defective in respect of such materials unless it also avers that the materials were entirely completed prior to the notice given by the owner.⁵³

Under some statutes it must be stated in substance that the materials were furnished for the purpose of being used in the building on which the lien is claimed,⁵⁴ and the failure of the lien claim to state the necessary facts in this respect is not cured by verdict on testimony showing the necessary facts to have actually existed.⁵⁵ Under other statutes, such a statement is not necessary.⁵⁶ Under some statutes it must be stated that the materials actually went into or were used in the building,⁵⁷ while under other statutes such statement is unnecessary.⁵⁸

owner, a claim or notice which does not specify the particular building for which the materials were furnished⁵⁹ or in which they were used⁶⁰ is not fatally defective

Materials furnished for an addition to a dwelling house with which it is to be occupied, and through which is the only means of access, are properly described as furnished for the dwelling house;⁶¹ but the rule is otherwise where the structure for which the materials were furnished is not an integral part of the dwelling house and was not erected under the same contract.⁶²

A claim for extra labor is insufficient where it does not show that it is for work performed on the structure in question.⁶³

c. Time of Rendering or Furnishing

A mechanic's lien claim or statement need not state the time of doing the work or furnishing the materials unless such a statement is required by statute.

In the absence of any statutory requirement it has been held not necessary to the validity of a mechanic's lien claim that it should state the time of doing the work or furnishing the materials,⁶⁴ or at least that it is not necessary to make any statement in respect of time other than one sufficient to show that the claim was filed within the period allowed by statute therefor,⁶⁵ although it is the better practice to give in the account the dates on which the items were done or furnished.⁶⁶

Generally, however, it is required by statute that the claim or statement shall show the time when the work was done or the materials furnished for which the lien is claimed.⁶⁷ In order to comply with the statutory requirement all that is necessary is such certainty as will enable those interested to discover during what period the materials were delivered or the work done so as to individuate the transaction.⁶⁸ The use of the expressions "on or about" a specified date has been held not to render the statement insufficient.⁶⁹ The exact language of the statute need not be followed if it otherwise appears that the materials were furnished at the time stated.⁷⁰ The use of figures in stating months and days has been upheld.⁷¹ It is sufficient if the required statement is made in an exhibit⁷² or in an itemized account filed with the sworn statement and claim of lien.⁷³

Where it appears that claimant is asserting a lien for materials only, any reference in his claim or notice to the time of performance of items of work may be ignored as surplusage.⁷⁴

The omission of the year, the months and days being stated, is fatal under a statute requiring the claim to state the time when the materials were furnished or the work done,⁷⁵ but not under a statute requiring merely "a just and true account."⁷⁶ Where the year is stated only at the head of the account but the paper itself shows that such year refers to the days and months placed opposite the items, it is sufficient.⁷⁷ Likewise, the omission of the year in connection with part of the items of an account is not fatal where the year may be ascertained by reference to other items in the account⁷⁸ or to an averment in the lien statement proper.⁷⁹

Errors and defects In some jurisdictions where the statutes are strictly construed it has been held that a false statement of the time is fatal to the lien.⁸⁰ More frequently, however, it has been held that mere inaccuracy in fixing the time will not defeat the lien where the statement was filed within the statutory period after the furnishing of the last item, and no one was prejudiced.⁸¹ An obvious error in stating an impossible date is not fatal where the true date may be ascertained⁸² by construction⁸³ or from other parts of the lien papers.⁸⁴

d. Value or Price

When required by statute, a lien notice, claim, or statement must state the agreed price or value of the labor performed or materials furnished.

A lien claim for services should show the value of the services rendered under an express or implied contract.⁸⁵ A lien cannot be sustained as a claim for work actually performed, independent of the contract, where there is no statement of the value of such work,⁸⁶ but the value of the labor performed or material furnished under contract need not be stated where the contract price is stated,⁸⁷ and in some jurisdictions it has been held generally that it is not necessary for the lien paper to state the reasonable value of the materials furnished.⁸⁸

Some statutes expressly require the notice of lien to state the agreed price or value of the labor performed or materials furnished,⁸⁹ or of materials

Itemized account or bill of particulars in proceedings to enforce lien see infra § 294

Object

(1) Itemization is required so that debtor and other creditors may determine from inspection of recorded account for what lien is claimed, whether for work and labor, and if so, nature of it, when performed, and at what price, or materials, and if so, the kind, quality, and price, and when furnished, or both labor and materials, and if so, the kind, quality, and price of each and when performed or furnished

In some jurisdictions it is necessary that the claim or statement should contain an itemized account of the work done and materials furnished,⁹³ at least where claimant is a subcontractor.⁹⁴ In other jurisdictions in some of which the statutory provisions are substantially the same or very similar, an itemized account is not necessary,⁹⁵ although even in such jurisdictions it is better practice to state in the notice of lien a particular description of the labor and material used in the construction of the building on which the lien was claimed.⁹⁶

Combination or separation of labor and material claims Whether the claim is for work or materials must be shown.⁹⁷ Claims for both labor and material ordinarily must be stated as separate items,⁹⁸ unless furnished under an entire contract for a gross sum,⁹⁹ but in some jurisdictions they may be combined in one item.¹

Separate contracts. Where a claimant combines claims due on separate contracts in one lien statement, and asserts a claim in a lump sum without specifying the particular amount due under each,

his claim for lien is void as against purchasers, creditors, and other lien claimants,² but, where a single lien may be obtained because the work was continuous, although done under different contracts, it is not necessary to state the amount due on each of the separate contracts³

Sufficiency generally The requirement of the statutes that the account must be itemized means that it must be set out by items⁴ The account filed must be fairly⁵ and reasonably⁶ itemized, and the particulars of the claim must be fully stated,⁷ that is, the itemized account or bill of particulars should be as full and specific as the nature of the case admits in respect of all matters as to which the adverse party ought to have information⁸

To what extent the account must be itemized depends somewhat on circumstances⁹ The sufficiency of the itemization must be determined in view of the objects and purposes of the statute¹⁰ The court will not require too great a particularity in the specification of the quality of the materials,¹¹ nor will the lien be lost because the items of the account do not descend to minute particulars¹² It is sufficient if there is a substantial compliance with the statutory requirement,¹³ if the statement of claim is itemized as nearly as practicable,¹⁴ or if the claim or account is as definite and specific as the contract under which the work or material was furnished¹⁵ Itemization in form is unnecessary if it appears in substance and effect¹⁶ It is sufficient if the required itemization appears in an account or other paper annexed to the claim, referred to therein and made a part thereof as an exhibit¹⁷ Where the statute requires both the specifications of the contract and an account of items to be filed, the same paper may serve both purposes when appropriate for both¹⁸

Sometimes part of the items are sufficiently stated, while others are not, and in such case the entire claim is not defeated¹⁹

Omission of proper items The owner is not entitled to complain because the lien account does not contain all the items for which a lien might have been maintained²⁰

Exhibit attached to notice of intention

(2) Contract for Gross Sum Generally, Extras

Itemization of a mechanic's lien claim or statement generally is not necessary where the work was done or the materials furnished under an entire contract to do or furnish the work or materials for a gross sum

It is well established that, where the work was done or the materials furnished under an entire contract to do or furnish the work or materials for a gross sum, it is not necessary that claimant should itemize his account in his lien statement.²¹ The most usual application of this rule is in the case of persons who contract directly with the owner,²² but the same rule has also been held to be applicable in the case of a subcontractor whose contract with the principal contractor is for a gross sum in payment for all work done or material furnished,²³ although there is some authority to the contrary.²⁴

Extras Where the claim is for the contract price and extras, it is sufficient to state the contract price and to itemize the extras.²⁵ Itemization or specification of extras is necessary where the sum claimed therefor was not agreed on or fixed,²⁶ but not where they were furnished under an agreement²⁷ for a specified price.²⁸ A failure to item-

ize the extras does not defeat the entire claim.²⁹

(3) Measurement and Computation

Where the amount of the claim is not a sum agreed on or fixed, but is the result of computation, the elements of the computation are the subject of an account which should be given.

Where the contract is that the price of the work shall be ascertained by measurement and computation after its completion, it is sufficient to set out generally in the lien claim or statement the nature of the work and the amount due without further specifications,³⁰ but, where the amount of the claim is not a sum agreed on or fixed, but is the result of computation, the elements of the computation are the subject of an account which should be given.³¹ Where the work is of a kind usually charged for by measurement and estimate, such as bricklaying, lathing, plastering, etc., it is sufficient to show the quantity and measurement of each of the different elements, with the price charged per unit of computation, and the total price.³² Where the claim is for labor, an account showing the number of days' or hours' labor performed or furnished, with the price per day or per hour and the total amount claimed to be due, is sufficient.³³ In some decisions it has been held that each article should be stated separately,³⁴ but in other decisions it has been held permissible to combine in one item materials of the same kind and price,³⁵ or several days' labor performed by the same person,³⁶ and it is not necessary to state each day's service of each particular person as a separate item³⁷

(4) Time

In the absence of statutory requirement, a mechanic's lien claim or statement need not state the date on which each particular item was furnished

It is not essential to the validity of a mechanic's lien claim or statement that the date on which each particular item was furnished should be given³⁸ Except in some jurisdictions,³⁹ the requirement as to the statement of time is fulfilled by stating that the work was done or the material furnished between two given dates,⁴⁰ at least where the work was done or the material furnished, or both, under an entire contract for a gross sum,⁴¹ or when claimant worked or furnished material under a contract continuously between the given dates,⁴² or where the owner and the contractor are one and the same person,⁴³ although not, it has been held, where it is obvious that the work could not have been continuously performed during the period elapsing between the dates mentioned,⁴⁴ or work was done on several buildings,⁴⁵ or claimant is a subcontractor⁴⁶

Indeed, some,⁴⁷ but not all,⁴⁸ statutes expressly require that the notice shall state the time when the first and last items of work were performed and materials were furnished. It has been held that the designation of the time merely of the last item is not sufficient,⁴⁹ but it has also been held in the same and other jurisdictions that one item for an article which required time for its completion, stating the day the last work is done and the article completed, will sustain the lien,⁵⁰ that, where the work is done by contract with the owner, the whole work and materials are in contemplation of law furnished when the contract is finished, and the statement of that date alone is sufficient;⁵¹ and that, where but one date is given in connection with the work done or materials furnished, such date is presumed to be the day on which the materials were furnished⁵² or the work completed⁵³

Where an entire bill of materials is purchased at one time but the items are delivered at various subsequent dates, it is proper either to arrange all the items under the one date of purchase, or to start with the date of purchase and continue with dates corresponding to the deliveries, but it would be more complete to state that the whole was purchased at one date and delivered piecemeal at certain named times thereafter⁵⁴

(5) Price or Value and Credits

Unless an aggregate price was agreed on between the claimant and the contractor or the owner, a mechanic's lien claim or statement ordinarily should state the prices charged for the various items.

Ordinarily the prices charged for the various items should be stated,⁵⁵ but, where an aggregate price was agreed on between claimant and the contractor⁵⁶ or the owner,⁵⁷ it is not essential that the price of each item set forth in the account should be stated, but it is sufficient where the account gives the aggregate price so agreed on by the parties⁵⁸ and the items are specified⁵⁹ with such particularity as to enable anyone interested to investigate as to whether the materials set forth in the account went into the structure and as to their value⁶⁰. The price of each item need not be stated where there is no statutory requirement calling for a statement of the price of each article⁶¹.

Separation of value of labor and material In the absence of statutory directions, the value of labor and material need not be separately stated⁶².

Itemization of credits. A statute providing for an itemized account of labor done and material furnished does not require the credits to be itemized⁶³.

(6) Trade Terms and Abbreviations

A mechanic's lien is not invalidated by the use of ordinary bookkeeping or commercial abbreviations in stating the account or by the use of trade terms or abbreviations in describing the items.

A mechanic's lien is not invalidated by the use of ordinary bookkeeping,⁶⁴ or commercial⁶⁵ abbreviations in stating the account, or by the use of trade terms⁶⁶ or abbreviations⁶⁷ in describing the items, and a fortiori, where there is a sufficient general designation or description of each article, the addition, by way of more particular description, of letters or abbreviations not commonly understood by persons not in the business of furnishing such materials, does not vitiate the account⁶⁸.

(7) Inclusion of Nonlienable Items

The inclusion in a mechanic's lien claim or statement in good faith of nonlienable items which are separable from the lienable items ordinarily does not invalidate the lien as to the proper and lienable charges.

The lien is not defeated by the inclusion in the lien claim or statement of charges for items which are not lienable,⁶⁹ such as materials which were not actually furnished⁷⁰ or used in the building or improvement,⁷¹ where the inclusion of such charges is due to inadvertence or an honest mistake without fraudulent intent,⁷² the lien paper contains one lienable item,⁷³ and the items for which claimant is entitled to a lien can be segregated from those which are improperly included,⁷⁴ in such case the illegal charges will be eliminated⁷⁵ and the lien will be enforced as to the proper and lienable charges.⁷⁶

The inclusion of such improper charges will, however, defeat the entire lien where they are willfully and intentionally included by claimant in order to obtain a lien for a larger amount than he is entitled to,⁷⁷ or where their inclusion is due to gross carelessness⁷⁸ or a recklessness tantamount to bad faith,⁷⁹ or where the account is so stated that the lienable and nonlienable items cannot be segregated⁸⁰

According to some authorities, it is proper to receive evidence to segregate the lienable from the nonlienable items,⁸¹ but according to other authorities, the segregation must be made from an inspection of the lien paper itself⁸² without resort to extrinsic evidence⁸³

§ 166. Signature

Unless required by statute, a lien notice, claim, statement, or account need not be signed
